WELFARE REFORM

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 1999

U.S. SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 1:47 p.m. in room 485, Senate Russell Building, Hon. Ben Nighthorse Campbell (chairman of the committee) presiding.

Present: Senators Campbell and Inouye.

STATEMENT OF HON. BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL, U.S. SENATOR FROM COLORADO, CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

This afternoon the committee will receive testimony on the implementation of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996. In 1996, after years of a Federal welfare regime that was overly bureaucratic and ineffective, Congress enacted this comprehensive welfare reform legislation.

Commonly known as "welfare reform," the statute is being implemented across the United States, including in Indian communities. The act consolidates programs such as Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Job Opportunities and Basic Skills into a block grant administered by local governments. The act also shifts the focus of welfare assistance from a program that simply hands out enough benefits to support a meager subsistence, to one that is focused on helping poor Americans make the transition from welfare to work.

In the long run this act is about work. In the short run, it is about transferring authority, funds, and decisionmaking from the Federal Government to local governments.

I believe that we are all familiar with the parade of horrors showing most Indians living in Third World conditions; unemployment hovering at about 50 percent; poverty is rampant; housing, health care, and educational opportunities are poor; and substance abuse and hopelessness are widespread. As chairman of this committee, one of the major focuses of my agenda is rehabilitating Indian economies and encouraging private sector development. In the meantime, we will give the tribes the tools they need to make welfare reform successful for their members. This may mean technical amendments to the act, enlarging the scope of programs like the current effort to consolidate employment and other initiatives to give tribes the resources and tools necessary to have a successful implementation of the law.

With that, I look forward to hearing the testimony today.

Public Law 104–193
104th Congress

An Act

To provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 201(a)(1) of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1997.

Aug. 22, 1996

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996. 42 USC 1305 note.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996".

SEC. 2. TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

TITLE I—BLOCK GRANTS FOR TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES

SEC. 101. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Marriage is the foundation of a successful society.

(2) Marriage is an essential institution of a successful society which promotes the interests of children.

(3) Promotion of responsible fatherhood and motherhood is integral to successful child rearing and the well-being of children.

(4) In 1992, only 54 percent of single-parent families with children had a child support order established and, of that 54 percent, only about one-half received the full amount due. Of the cases enforced through the public child support enforcement system, only 18 percent of the caseload has a collection.

(5) The number of individuals receiving aid to families with dependent children (in this section referred to as "AFDC") has more than tripled since 1965. More than two-thirds of these recipients are children. Eighty-nine percent of children receiving AFDC benefits now live in homes in which no father is present.

(I) was 3,300,000 in 1965;

(II) was 6,200,000 in 1970;

(III) was 7,400,000 in 1980; and

(IV) was 9,300,000 in 1992.

(ii) While the number of children receiving AFDC benefits increased nearly threefold between 1965 and 1992, the total number of children in the United States aged 0 to 18 has declined by 5.5 percent.

(B) The Department of Health and Human Services has estimated that 12,000,000 children will receive AFDC benefits within 10 years.

(C) The increase in the number of children receiving public assistance is closely related to the increase in births to unmarried women. Between 1970 and 1991, the percentage of live births to unmarried women increased nearly threefold, from 10.7 percent to 29.5 percent.

(6) The increase of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and births is well documented as follows:

(A) It is estimated that the rate of nonmarital teen pregnancy rose 23 percent from 54 pregnancies per 1,000 unmarried teenagers in 1976 to 66.7 pregnancies in 1991. The overall rate of nonmarital pregnancy rose 14 percent from 90.8 pregnancies per 1,000 unmarried women in 1980 to 103 in both 1991 and 1992. In contrast, the overall pregnancy rate for married couples decreased 7.3 percent between 1980 and 1991, from 126.9 pregnancies per 1,000 married women in 1980 to 117.6 pregnancies in 1991.

(B) The total of all out-of-wedlock births between 1970 and 1991 has risen from 10.7 percent to 29.5 percent and if the current trend continues, 50 percent of all births by the year 2015 will be out-of-wedlock.

(7) An effective strategy to combat teenage pregnancy must address the issue of male responsibility, including statutory rape culpability and prevention. The increase of teenage pregnancies among the youngest girls is particularly severe and is linked to predatory sexual practices by men who are significantly older.

(A) It is estimated that in the late 1980's, the rate for girls age 14 and under giving birth increased 26 percent.

(B) Data indicates that at least half of the children born to teenage mothers are fathered by adult men. Available data suggests that almost 70 percent of births to teenage girls are fathered by men over age 20.

(C) Surveys of teen mothers have revealed that a majority of such mothers have histories of sexual and physical abuse, primarily with older adult men.

(8) The negative consequences of an out-of-wedlock birth on the mother, the child, the family, and society are well documented as follows:

(A) Young women 17 and under who give birth outside of marriage are more likely to go on public assistance and to spend more years on welfare once enrolled. These combined effects of "younger and longer" increase total AFDC costs per household by 25 percent to 30 percent for 17-year-olds.

(B) Children born out-of-wedlock have a substantially higher risk of being born at a very low or moderately low birth weight.

(C) Children born out-of-wedlock are more likely to experience low verbal cognitive attainment, as well as more child abuse, and neglect.

(D) Children born out-of-wedlock were more likely to have lower cognitive scores, lower educational aspirations, and a greater likelihood of becoming teenage parents themselves.

(E) Being born out-of-wedlock significantly reduces the chances of the child growing up to have an intact marriage.

(F) Children born out-of-wedlock are 3 times more likely to be on welfare when they grow up.

(9) Currently 35 percent of children in single-parent homes were born out-of-wedlock, nearly the same percentage as that of children in single-parent homes whose parents are divorced (37 percent). While many parents find themselves, through divorce or tragic circumstances beyond their control, facing the difficult task of raising children alone, nevertheless, the negative consequences of raising children in single-parent homes are well documented as follows:

(A) Only 9 percent of married-couple families with children under 18 years of age have income below the national poverty level. In contrast, 46 percent of female-headed households with children under 18 years of age are below the national poverty level.

(B) Among single-parent families, nearly ½ of the mothers who never married received AFDC while only ⅙ of divorced mothers received AFDC.

(C) Children born into families receiving welfare assistance are 3 times more likely to be on welfare when they reach adulthood than children not born into families receiving welfare.

(D) Mothers under 20 years of age are at the greatest risk of bearing low birth weight babies.

(E) The younger the single-parent mother, the less likely she is to finish high school.

(F) Young women who have children before finishing high school are more likely to receive welfare assistance for a longer period of time.

(G) Between 1985 and 1990, the public cost of births to teenage mothers under the aid to families with dependent children program, the food stamp program, and the medicaid program has been estimated at $120,000,000,000.

(H) The absence of a father in the life of a child has a negative effect on school performance and peer adjustment.

(I) Children of teenage single parents have lower cognitive scores, lower educational aspirations, and a greater likelihood of becoming teenage parents themselves.

(J) Children of single-parent homes are 3 times more likely to fail and repeat a year in grade school than are children from intact 2-parent families.

(K) Children from single-parent homes are almost 4 times more likely to be expelled or suspended from school.

(L) Neighborhoods with larger percentages of youth aged 12 through 20 and areas with higher percentages of single-parent households have higher rates of violent crime.

(M) Of those youth held for criminal offenses within the State juvenile justice system, only 29.8 percent lived primarily in a home with both parents. In contrast to these incarcerated youth, 73.9 percent of the 62,800,000 children in the Nation's resident population were living with both parents.

(10) Therefore, in light of this demonstration of the crisis in our Nation, it is the sense of the Congress that prevention of out-of-wedlock pregnancy and reduction in out-of-wedlock birth are very important Government interests and the policy contained in part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 103(a) of this Act) is intended to address the crisis.

SEC. 102. REFERENCE TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.

Except as otherwise specifically provided, wherever in this title an amendment is expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to that section or other provision of the Social Security Act.

SEC. 103. BLOCK GRANTS TO STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part A of title IV (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) is amended—

42 USC prec. 601, 601–610, 612, 613, 615–617.

(1) by striking all that precedes section 418 (as added by section 603(b)(2) of this Act) and inserting the following:

"PART A—BLOCK GRANTS TO STATES FOR TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES

"SEC. 401. PURPOSE. 42 USC 601.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The purpose of this part is to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to—

"(1) provide assistance to needy families so that children may be cared for in their own homes or in the homes of relatives;

"(2) end the dependence of needy parents on government benefits by promoting job preparation, work, and marriage;

"(3) prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and establish annual numerical goals for preventing and reducing the incidence of these pregnancies; and

"(4) encourage the formation and maintenance of two-parent families.

"(b) NO INDIVIDUAL ENTITLEMENT.—This part shall not be interpreted to entitle any individual or family to assistance under any State program funded under this part.

"SEC. 402. ELIGIBLE STATES; STATE PLAN. 42 USC 602.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—As used in this part, the term 'eligible State' means, with respect to a fiscal year, a State that, during the 2-year period immediately preceding the fiscal year, has submitted to the Secretary a plan that the Secretary has found includes the following:

"(1) OUTLINE OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—

"(A) GENERAL PROVISIONS.—A written document that outlines how the State intends to do the following:

"(i) Conduct a program, designed to serve all political subdivisions in the State (not necessarily in a uniform manner), that provides assistance to needy families with (or expecting) children and provides parents with job preparation, work, and support services to enable them to leave the program and become self-sufficient.

"(ii) Require a parent or caretaker receiving assistance under the program to engage in work (as defined by the State) once the State determines the parent or caretaker is ready to engage in work, or once the parent or caretaker has received assistance under the program for 24 months (whether or not consecutive), whichever is earlier.

"(iii) Ensure that parents and caretakers receiving assistance under the program engage in work activities in accordance with section 407.

"(iv) Take such reasonable steps as the State deems necessary to restrict the use and disclosure of information about individuals and families receiving assistance under the program attributable to funds provided by the Federal Government.

"(v) Establish goals and take action to prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with special emphasis on teenage pregnancies, and establish numerical goals for reducing the illegitimacy ratio of the State (as defined in section 403(a)(2)(B)) for calendar years 1996 through 2005.

"(vi) Conduct a program, designed to reach State and local law enforcement officials, the education system, and relevant counseling services, that provides education and training on the problem of statutory rape so that teenage pregnancy prevention programs may be expanded in scope to include men.

"(B) SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

"(i) The document shall indicate whether the State intends to treat families moving into the State from another State differently than other families under the program, and if so, how the State intends to treat such families under the program.

"(ii) The document shall indicate whether the State intends to provide assistance under the program to individuals who are not citizens of the United States, and if so, shall include an overview of such assistance.

"(iii) The document shall set forth objective criteria for the delivery of benefits and the determination of eligibility and for fair and equitable treatment, including an explanation of how the State will provide opportunities for recipients who have been adversely affected to be heard in a State administrative or appeal process.

"(iv) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, unless the chief executive officer of the State opts out of this provision by notifying the Secretary, a State shall, consistent with the exception provided in section 407(e)(2), require a parent or caretaker receiving assistance under the program who, after receiving such assistance for 2 months is not exempt from work requirements and is not engaged in work, as determined under section 407(c), to participate in community service employment, with minimum hours per week and tasks to be determined by the State.

"(2) CERTIFICATION THAT THE STATE WILL OPERATE A CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM.—A certification by the chief executive officer of the State that, during the fiscal year, the State will operate a child support enforcement program under the State plan approved under part D.

"(3) CERTIFICATION THAT THE STATE WILL OPERATE A FOSTER CARE AND ADOPTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—A certification by the chief executive officer of the State that, during the fiscal year, the State will operate a foster care and adoption assistance program under the State plan approved under part E, and that the State will take such actions as are necessary to ensure that children receiving assistance under such part are eligible for medical assistance under the State plan under title XIX.

"(4) CERTIFICATION OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE PROGRAM.—A certification by the chief executive officer of the State specifying which State agency or agencies will administer and supervise the program referred to in paragraph (1) for the fiscal year, which shall include assurances that local governments and private sector organizations—

"(A) have been consulted regarding the plan and design of welfare services in the State so that services are provided in a manner appropriate to local populations; and

"(B) have had at least 45 days to submit comments on the plan and the design of such services.

"(5) CERTIFICATION THAT THE STATE WILL PROVIDE INDIANS WITH EQUITABLE ACCESS TO ASSISTANCE.—A certification by the chief executive officer of the State that, during the fiscal year, the State will provide each member of an Indian tribe, who is domiciled in the State and is not eligible for assistance under a tribal family assistance plan approved under section 412, with equitable access to assistance under the State program funded under this part attributable to funds provided by the Federal Government.

"(6) CERTIFICATION OF STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES TO ENSURE AGAINST PROGRAM FRAUD AND ABUSE.—A certification by the chief executive officer of the State that the State has established and is enforcing standards and procedures to ensure against program fraud and abuse, including standards and procedures concerning nepotism, conflicts of interest among individuals responsible for the administration and supervision of the State program, kickbacks, and the use of political patronage.

"(7) OPTIONAL CERTIFICATION OF STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES TO ENSURE THAT THE STATE WILL SCREEN FOR AND IDENTIFY DOMESTIC VIOLENCE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—At the option of the State, a certification by the chief executive officer of the State that the State has established and is enforcing standards and procedures to—

"(i) screen and identify individuals receiving assistance under this part with a history of domestic violence while maintaining the confidentiality of such individuals;

"(ii) refer such individuals to counseling and supportive services; and

"(iii) waive, pursuant to a determination of good cause, other program requirements such as time limits (for so long as necessary) for individuals receiving assistance, residency requirements, child support cooperation requirements, and family cap provisions, in cases where compliance with such requirements would make it more difficult for individuals receiving assistance under this part to escape domestic violence or unfairly penalize such individuals who are or have been victimized by such violence, or individuals who are at risk of further domestic violence.

"(B) DOMESTIC VIOLENCE DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'domestic violence' has the same meaning as the term 'battered or subjected to extreme cruelty', as defined in section 408(a)(7)(C)(iii).

"(b) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY OF STATE PLAN SUMMARY.—The State shall make available to the public a summary of any plan submitted by the State under this section.

"(aa) The State demonstrates that the number of out-of-wedlock births that occurred in the State during the most recent 2-year period for which such information is available decreased as compared to the number of such births that occurred during the previous 2-year period, and the magnitude of the decrease for the State for the period is not exceeded by the magnitude of the corresponding decrease for 5 or more other States for the period.

"(bb) The rate of induced pregnancy terminations in the State for the fiscal year is less than the rate of induced pregnancy terminations in the State for fiscal year 1995.

"(II) DISREGARD OF CHANGES IN DATA DUE TO CHANGED REPORTING METHODS.—In making the determination required by subclause (I), the Secretary shall disregard—

"(aa) any difference between the number of out-of-wedlock births that occurred in a State for a fiscal year and the number of out-of-wedlock births that occurred in a State for fiscal year 1995 which is attributable to a change in State methods of reporting data used to calculate the number of out-of-wedlock births; and

"(I) the amount (if any) required to be paid to the State under this paragraph for the immediately preceding fiscal year; and

"(II) 2.5 percent of the sum of—

"(aa) the total amount required to be paid to the State under former section 403 (as in effect during fiscal year 1994) for fiscal year 1994; and

"(bb) the amount (if any) required to be paid to the State under this paragraph for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the grant is to be made.

"(B) PRESERVATION OF GRANT WITHOUT INCREASES FOR STATES FAILING TO REMAIN QUALIFYING STATES.—Each State that is not a qualifying State for a fiscal year specified in subparagraph (A)(ii) but was a qualifying State for a prior fiscal year shall, subject to subparagraph (F), be entitled to receive from the Secretary for the specified fiscal year, a grant in an amount equal to the amount required to be paid to the State under this paragraph for the most recent fiscal year for which the State was a qualifying State.

"(C) QUALIFYING STATE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, a State is a qualifying State for a fiscal year if—

"(I) the level of welfare spending per poor person by the State for the immediately preceding fiscal year is less than the national average level of State welfare spending per poor person for such preceding fiscal year; and

"(ii) STATE MUST QUALIFY IN FISCAL YEAR 1997.—Notwithstanding clause (i), a State shall not be a qualifying State for any fiscal year after 1998 by reason of clause (i) if the State is not a qualifying State for fiscal year 1998 by reason of clause (i).

"(iii) CERTAIN STATES DEEMED QUALIFYING STATES.—For purposes of this paragraph, a State is deemed to be a qualifying State for fiscal years 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2001 if—

"(I) the level of welfare spending per poor person by the State for fiscal year 1994 is less than 35 percent of the national average level of State welfare spending per poor person for fiscal year 1994; or

"(II) the population of the State increased by more than 10 percent from April 1, 1990 to July 1, 1994, according to the population estimates in publication CB94–204 of the Bureau of the Census.

"(D) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this paragraph:

"(bb) the amount (if any) paid to the State under this paragraph for the immediately preceding fiscal year; divided by

"(II) the number of individuals, according to the 1990 decennial census, who were residents of the State and whose income was below the poverty line.

"(ii) NATIONAL AVERAGE LEVEL OF STATE WELFARE SPENDING PER POOR PERSON.—The term 'national average level of State welfare spending per poor person' means, with respect to a fiscal year, an amount equal to—

"(I) the total amount required to be paid to the States under former section 403 (as in effect during fiscal year 1994) for fiscal year 1994; divided by

TITLE IV—RESTRICTING WELFARE AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR ALIENS

SEC. 400. STATEMENTS OF NATIONAL POLICY CONCERNING WELFARE AND IMMIGRATION.

The Congress makes the following statements concerning national policy with respect to welfare and immigration:

(1) Self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of United States immigration law since this country's earliest immigration statutes.

(2) It continues to be the immigration policy of the United States that—

(A) aliens within the Nation's borders not depend on public resources to meet their needs, but rather rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families, their sponsors, and private organizations, and

(B) the availability of public benefits not constitute an incentive for immigration to the United States.

(3) Despite the principle of self-sufficiency, aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits from Federal, State, and local governments at increasing rates.

(4) Current eligibility rules for public assistance and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved wholly incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system.

(5) It is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements in order to assure that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

(6) It is a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits.

(7) With respect to the State authority to make determinations concerning the eligibility of qualified aliens for public benefits in this title, a State that chooses to follow the Federal classification in determining the eligibility of such aliens for public assistance shall be considered to have chosen the least restrictive means available for achieving the compelling governmental interest of assuring that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

or to any benefit payable under title II of the Social Security Act to which entitlement is based on an application filed in or before the month in which this Act becomes law.

WEEKLY COMPILATION OF PRESIDENTIAL DOCUMENTS, Vol. 32 (1996):

Aug 22, Presidential remarks and statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Inouye, our vice chairman, did you have a statement?

STATEMENT OF HON. DANIEL K. INOUYE, U.S. SENATOR FROM HAWAII, VICE CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Senator INOUYE. I want to commend the Chairman for scheduling this hearing, and I join you in welcoming the witnesses this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that to better understand what we will be discussing today, it would be helpful to know what has come up before us. When the responsibility for administering Federal programs was turned over to the States through the principal block grants, such as the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant and title XX Block Grant, there was a massive infusion of Federal dollars to the States that accompanied those new responsibilities. This funding, estimated to be in the billions of dollars, was made available to the States so that they could develop the necessary infrastructure, computers, and recordkeeping capabilities. These systems enable the States to have the necessary means of keeping track of the millions of beneficiaries to whom they would now be providing services.

With Federal funds, these systems were developed by the States. So when we began considering the various welfare reform initiatives, we did so with the understanding that the States had comprehensive and sophisticated systems in place that could track the transition of welfare recipients to work settings. But this was not the case for tribal governments. They had not received Federal funding for the development of the necessary infrastructure, and so we knew well before the act was signed into law that there would be problems with the implementation of the act in Indian country. We knew that there was a built-in disincentive for tribes that assumed the responsibilities associated with welfare reform, for in most cases, unless the State was willing to provide that portion of the Federal funding they received for providing services to tribal welfare recipients, the tribal governments would be assuming Federal program responsibilities with only one-half the resources that the Federal Government had needed required to administer these programs.

We knew tribes would need technical assistance in developing a comprehensive infrastructure to administer the welfare-to-work initiative—and, indeed, the need for technical assistance has proven to be great. And perhaps most importantly, we knew that tribal and State governments would have to work closely together. They would have to coordinate their efforts and set up tracking systems that would compliment those efforts, and yet it is my understanding that the funding to enable tribal and State governments to come together has not been forthcoming.

We also understood that tribal governments would initially have higher administrative costs than the States, primarily because we were not providing the resources that had been provided to the States for the development of the necessary infrastructure. Some have suggested that there should be a sliding scale of administrative costs that could, in essence, slide downward as tribes develop the systems necessary to administer the act. Others have placed a priority on authority to carry over funding from 1 year to the next. And finally, perhaps the highest priority is for adequate funding so that tribal governments can effectively administer the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families initiative.

We continue to hear that the States have large surpluses of Federal funding for welfare-to-work, and we know that tribal governments are woefully underfunded. Perhaps the time has come to shift the resources to where the need is the greatest.

With all of this said, however, our greatest challenge will be to find work, when in most areas of Indian country there simply are no jobs.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Tribal Services Division within the Department for doing so much with such limited resources. That Division is headed, as you know, by a former member of the committee staff, Mr. John Bushman.

Mr. Bushman, you continue to make us very proud.

Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. And with that, we will start with our first panel.

I might tell all of the witnesses that we give a little more latitude to the administration and to the members if they are here to testify, but we try to make it equal in the time for people to testify. So any written testimony will be included in the record, and if you would like to abbreviate, we would appreciate that. There is a little light up here that will remind you to abbreviate, too.

With that, Olivia Golden, Assistant Secretary, Administration for Children and Families.

Welcome before this committee, Olivia. You may proceed at your own pace.

STATEMENT OF OLIVIA GOLDEN, ASSISTANT SECRETARY, ADMINISTRATION FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, WASHINGTON, DC, ACCOMPANIED BY JOHN BUSHMAN, DIRECTOR, TRIBAL SERVICES DIVISION

Ms. GOLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will be summarizing more extensive written testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Fine.

Ms. GOLDEN. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Inouye, members of the committee, I am pleased to be here today to discuss welfare reform, and especially the important new choices in designing welfare, child care, and child support programs that the 1996 welfare reform legislation offers to tribes. I would also like to share our work with tribes to ensure that welfare reform is successful, and to ensure that it is implemented in the full spirit of government-to-government relationships.

Under welfare reform, the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families Program, or TANF, replaces the former AFDC Program. Tribal governments, at their option, may receive direct Federal funding to independently design, administer, and operate the TANF Program, or may choose to allow States to continue providing these services to tribal families.

Further, welfare reform provided tribes with expanded child care funding and broader authority to administer the Child Support Program. Tribes can enter into new partnerships with States to ensure that tribal families receive the support services needed to become self-sufficient.

Since the President signed welfare reform in 1996, we have approved 19 tribal TANF Programs. These TANF Programs involve 62 Indian tribes and Alaska Native villages, operate in 12 States, and serve over 13,500 individuals. Using the enhanced flexibility provided by the law, tribes have developed a variety of service strategies that respond to the unique circumstances of each community. For example, one tribe with joint funding provided by the TANF Program and the Bureau of Indian Affairs provides a one-stop service center and maintains a toll-free 24-hour voice mail service for recipients living in remote areas.

In the remaining areas of the country, tribal families are served by State TANF Programs and are subject to the same responsibilities and eligible for the same opportunities that a State elects for its population at large. To understand more about the effects that these service design choices are having on tribal families, ACF approved a 5-year research and evaluation project entitled——

Welfare-to-Work: Monitoring the Impact of Welfare Reform on American Indian Families with Children.

I know you will be hearing from the principal investigator of that project, Dr. Eddie Brown, later in the hearing.

Welfare reform also offers tribes significant new flexibility in child support enforcement, a critical part of self-sufficiency efforts. Although tribes are not yet operating programs under the broad direct funding approach the law now allows, we are seeing some promising results from early State-tribal cooperative agreements and tribal demonstration grants. For example, the Navajo Nation collected $500,000 in child support collections in New Mexico in fiscal year 1998, where previously there had been almost no child support collected.

Like child support, child care is a vital supportive service to self-sufficiency. Welfare reform made changes allowing States and tribes to design a comprehensive, integrated service delivery system to meet the needs of low income families. In fiscal year 1999, tribes received $63 million in direct child care funding, double the amount received in fiscal year 1996.

I would now like to briefly turn to ACF's outreach, consultation and technical assistance efforts to work with tribes on these historic legislative changes. Our goals, in keeping with the government-to-government relationship that is central to our work with tribes, are to consult broadly and to provide information that can assist tribes in making the wide range of choices that they face about the most effective ways to assist tribal members in becoming self-sufficient.

With respect to consultation, in the development of the tribal TANF regulations we held dozens of meetings with representatives of tribal, State, and local governments. We intensified these outreach efforts in developing tribal child support program regulations. Six consultations were held in 1998, and we established a toll-free 800 number for comments and questions. We are committed to improving our consultation strategies with tribes as welfare reform evolves.

In addition, we have been involved in providing technical assistance on a number of fronts. For example, we sponsored five Promising Practices National Conferences, together with the Department of Labor, and we included tribal representation. Later in April we are planning a workshop in Denver to bring together States, tribes, and tribal colleges to strengthen the tribes' role in welfare reform.

Our Administration for Native Americans has provided resources as well, including $1.2 million for five grants to develop and disseminate information on TANF. Additional collaborative work among ACF programs is planned for the future.

The Office of Child Support Enforcement has published a guide on tribal child support programs, and is working with its contractor, Native American Management Services, to design technical assistance plans for tribal child support demonstration grantees.

Finally, with respect to child care, we have awarded a contract to establish and operate a tribal child care technical assistance center to provide a range of assistance, including a tribal child care home page, a toll-free information and referral line, and an annual tribal conference.

In conclusion, our goal in welfare reform is enabling families to move to work and to succeed at work over the long haul. We are committed to building on the early steps I have outlined today and working together with our tribal and State partners and the committee to see increasing numbers of tribal members improve their lives and become self-sufficient.

Thank you very much for this opportunity, and I would be happy to answer any questions.

[Prepared statement of Ms. Golden appears in appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Olivia.

Frankly, to hear you, it sounds like you are off to a good start and doing very well and providing a good service through the TANF Program. I have been made aware, though, that in our committee we have gotten some letters from different tribes who complain about the lack of input and the lack of involvement in the TANF Program. Let me ask you just a couple of quick questions.

Are the TANF funds available for construction of facilities, too?

Ms. GOLDEN. The child care dollars have a specific exception for tribes that makes child care dollars available for construction and renovation.

The CHAIRMAN. Like for child care facilities?

Ms. GOLDEN. That's right. And that's not available for States, but there is a specific provision for tribes.

I don't know of that ability through the TANF dollars, but I can double-check.

[Information follows:]

The Comptroller General of the United States has prohibited the use of Federal funds for the construction or purchase of facilities or buildings unless there is explicit statutory authority permitting Federal grant funds to be used for this purpose. The welfare reform statute is silent on this matter, except for the specific provision for construction and renovation for tribal child care. Therefore, in general States and tribes may not use Federal TANF funds for construction or the purchase of facilities or buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. You talked somewhat about technical assistance, and I appreciate that. As I understand it, States are eligible for funds that are called the 1115 funds to evaluate the effectiveness of the TANF Programs. Do you have the same kind of process for tribes? And if you do, how much money has been allocated to them?

Ms. GOLDEN. Section 1115 only applies to States. We actually use the 1110 dollars which are for both States and tribes. The support, for example, that we have been able to offer to Dr. Brown in his research work comes out of our 1110 research dollars. Some of our technical assistance efforts—such as an add-on workshop for tribes at the end of our last Promising Practices Conferences, were funded from this source. We have also, as I noted in my testimony, used resources from the administration for Native Americans for technical assistance. So we have used several sources.

I would definitely agree that we have a ways to go to meet all of the needs. We are working hard to use all the resources we have to meet the technical assistance needs, but I definitely don't think we have finished that task.

Actually, funding for this purpose is available through funds allocated under section 1110 of the Social Security Act and tribes are eligible to receive such funds for research and evaluation.

In fiscal year 1997, ACF approved a 5-year research and evaluation project [9/30/97-9/29/02] entitled "Welfare to Work: Monitoring the Impact of Welfare Reform on American Indian Families with Children." The overall purpose of this longitudinal study is to monitor and document the implementation, and assess the impact, of welfare reform on American Indian Families and reservations in Arizona resulting from the State and tribal responses to TANF. Extensive demographic, contextual, socio-economic and case-level data will be compiled from a variety of sources, including administrative records, tribal documents, interviews and site visits. A grant in support of the project was awarded to University of Washington [St. Louis]. For the first 2 years of this project, ACF has awarded $234,215 in fiscal year 1997 and $236,802 fiscal year 1998. We intend to continue to support this project in future budget periods.

One of the preliminary findings of the study is that many tribes while interested in self-administration of the program are unsure about the best strategy to follow; they are interested in learning from the experiences of other tribes in order to examine their options. ACF plans to award a short-term contract to develop national-level research information on tribal TANF which would be responsive to these tribal needs as well as other policy questions. Overall, we are in the process of providing an additional $200,000 in fiscal year 1999 to support additional research and evaluation efforts in support of Tribal TANF.

The CHAIRMAN. There is certainly a correlation between families that are in disarray and alcohol and drug problems on reservations, and I am sure you are aware of that, and yet we have all kinds of programs out there—each seeming to be doing its own thing, in many respects—to try to curtail that, as you know.

Would you support an effort by this committee to try to combine some of the drug and alcohol programs into a single program?

Ms. GOLDEN. I guess what I would be best able to speak to would be some of the strategies we've tried to use to provide information and assistance about how to do that at the ground level. I don't know the issues in terms of where the Administration would be on a legislative proposal. But what we have focused on—I think you are absolutely right, that the substance issues are critical to enabling welfare reform to work fully. When we sponsored those Promising Practices Conferences initially, we cosponsored with SAMHSA, with the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Agency at HHS, and we found just what you would expect, that in States—and I'm sure it's also true in tribes—the people who are experts in the different areas didn't necessarily know each other.

So I would be very strongly supportive and interested in working on efforts to bring people together to disseminate the information. That, I think, is a direction in which we would be very interested in going.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. I thank you.

Senator Inouye, did you have further questions?

Senator INOUYE. Yes.

Ms. Golden, I would like to commend you and Secretary Shalala for creating this Administration for Children and Families Division of Tribal Services.

Ms. GOLDEN. Thank you.

Senator INOUYE. As you know, in the fiscal year 1998 HHS appropriations act, we encouraged the Department to devote sufficient resources.

Are you devoting sufficient resources to make commitments to the program, to provide services, information, enhancement, and assistance to tribes that are in the planning stage of TANF or that are presently operating a TANF Program or for ongoing monitoring to assist them in keeping current?

Ms. GOLDEN. Well, let me tell you a little bit about what we are doing. What I would say is that we are doing our best. We are using resources from a variety of sources, as I said to Senator Campbell, in order to try to meet the technical assistance needs. We are pooling resources, some of which come on the welfare side—the Section 1115 resources. We have used resources that the Administration for Native Americans can make available, also legitimately. Also we are using, in child care and child support, technical assistance resources there. And in addition, as you have noted, the Division of Tribal Services, led by John Bushman, has been providing extraordinary leadership.

As the committee looks at the administration's budget request for fiscal year 2000, I do want to note that the administration's request there for staffing is really key to our ability to be able to maintain that level of service. As an agency we have shrunk a great deal over the past few years, and we are trying to maintain ourselves in this coming year, because I think it is critical to not only have the support from contractors, but also to be able to use our own staff in that kind of assistance.

So I think what I would say is that I think we are being creative and doing our best. I don't think we're meeting every need yet.

Senator INOUYE. In your creative collection of funds, what is the cumulative dollar value of these?

Ms. GOLDEN. I don't think I have a current total. The Administration for Native Americans grants added up to, I think, $1.2 million. I can't remember if that was 1997 or 1998. We are in the process of making our decisions for 1999, and I don't know the total number, but we could get that to you.

We have provided almost $5 million since enactment of welfare reform legislation for a wide range of technical assistance activities for tribes across several programs of the Administration for Children and Families. Child Care, Child Support and our Administration for Native American offices have engaged in visits, meetings, promising practices conferences, workshops, training, information dissemination, strategy development grants, planning and demonstration grants, and consultation contracts. ACF spent approximately $1.4 million in fiscal year 1997 and $1.6 million in fiscal year 1998. We plan to spend an additional $1.9 million in fiscal year 1999.

In addition to these funds which were specifically targeted to tribes, the Administration for Children and Families spent $2.2 million in fiscal year 1998 and has budgeted $1.55 million for fiscal year 1999 for technical assistance for the TANF program. These funds are used to promote and enhance state and tribal TANF programs.

Senator INOUYE. Is there a ballpark figure?

Ms. GOLDEN. My guess would be between $1 million and $2 million for 1999, but I don't know that figure accurately, and we should get back to you. And that's not the salary side; that's the grants and contracts side. But we should get back to you.

Senator INOUYE. Would you consider that to be devoting sufficient resources?

Ms. GOLDEN. I think that what we are doing is devoting resources to the critical needs and making a big difference to the tribes. I would say that we have—I actually didn't add into that number the child care and child support, which are also considerable dollars. So I would say that it is a major investment in technical assistance in those areas.

Senator INOUYE. I believe that most of us on this committee would believe that close collaboration and cooperation between the States and tribal governments would be absolutely essential. Is anything being done to bring this about?

Ms. GOLDEN. Yes; I am glad that you asked that, because I share the view that it is essential and I really appreciate the committee's commitment.

One of the things we've learned as we've refined our technical assistance strategies is how important it is to have strategies that bring tribes and States together. An example of that would be the session that we are planning in late April of this year in region 8, our Denver region, where we will be bringing tribes, States, and tribal colleges together to plan.

We have also done some things to really push States to come to the table. I mentioned that 9 of the 12 States where there are TANF Programs are contributing matching funds—where there are tribal TANF Programs—are contributing matching funds, and I think one of the reasons is that we have been jawboning on that issue, but also we put out a policy guidance to the States that made clear to them that if they made contributions to the tribal programs, those would count for their State maintenance of effort requirements. So it made it much more appealing to them to invest dollars.

So I really think it's incredibly important to have the State-tribal partnerships. Actually, I have been hearing that from States as well as from tribal members lately, and I just think that we need to keep pushing.

Senator INOUYE. Are you satisfied with the response from the States?

Ms. GOLDEN. I believe we've made some very important steps. I think we have further to go. I was just speaking with one of the gentlemen attending this hearing and he had the sense, as I think is true in a number of places, that States have made first steps, but that the next steps in terms of truly investing in tribal communities—not every State is equal. I'm going to have a chance to hear some more firsthand. I had the opportunity a few months ago to speak with some of the leaders of the Navajo child support cooperative agreement with New Mexico and heard about their experiences. I'll have a chance to be at the Mille Lac Reservation in Minnesota in a few weeks. So I am really seeking to learn about that.

I guess what I would say is that there have been really important first steps. Dr. Brown's research highlights that, but we need to keep pushing.

Senator INOUYE. I think it is obvious that in order for this welfare reform program to succeed, jobs must be available for TANF recipients. What is your organization doing to ensure that Indian country is aware of economic or job development programs, such as the Urban and Rural Community Economic Development Block Grants and the Job Opportunity for Low Income Individuals Block Grants? Are tribes eligible to participate in these programs?

Ms. GOLDEN. Let me give you a general answer and then I can probably get you the specific answer on the particular programs you mentioned.

I think the broad answer is that, again, I share completely the view that it is critical for tribes—and for States—that are running TANF Programs that reach tribal families to understand about the link to economic development.

One of the things we have been trying to do is make sure that everybody understands how flexible the TANF dollars are, because sometimes people have in their heads that they're like the old AFDC dollars and that they need to be used for welfare cash assistance, but the TANF dollars themselves can be used in job creation strategies, and so can the Department of Labor's welfare-to-work dollars, which also have a set-aside for tribes. So we have been really trying to get people to understand those economic development possibilities.

We have also been working on the links to other economic development programs. As you know, the Division of Tribal Services is organizationally located within our Office of Community Services, which oversees the Job Opportunities Program you mentioned. So we have been trying to make those linkages.

We are also planning that our future technical assistance will make those linkages more fully, so I think you are absolutely right to highlight that issue.

Senator INOUYE. My question was, are tribal governments eligible to participate in these block grant programs that I mentioned?

Ms. GOLDEN. Let me check the answer to that. If we can't get it this minute, I'll get that back to you. Your questions were about the—— Senator INOUYE. Urban and Rural Community Economic Development Block Grants, and the Job Opportunities for Low Income Individuals.

Ms. GOLDEN. We should be able to get you the answer very quickly on the Job Opportunities one, which we administer. The other one, I may need to get back to you on.

[Information follows:]

The Office of Community Services within the Administration for Children and Families administers the Urban and Rural Community Economic Development [URCED] program and the Job Opportunities for Low-Income Individuals [JOLI] program.

Tribes are eligible to participate in both the URCED and the JOLI programs if they have formed a non-profit organization. For URCED, the tribe would have to be community economic development corporation. To date, no such corporations have been funded under the URCED program. Under JOLI, the tribe would have to be either a community economic development corporation or a community action agency. We have funded two non-profit Native American organizations under the JOLI program, Fairbanks Native Association, Inc. located in Fairbanks, Alaska and Central Maine Indian Community Development Corp.

Senator INOUYE. If they are not eligible, would you like to have an amendment enacted so that Indian governments can be eligible?

Ms. GOLDEN. Let me find the information on them, and then we would be happy to let you know.

Senator INOUYE. Mr. Chairman, can I ask Mr. Bushman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Sure.

Mr. Bushman, why don't you come up to the table?

Ms. GOLDEN. The Job Opportunities for Low Income Families Program is available—not for tribal governments, but for nonprofit organizations.

Senator INOUYE. But not for tribal governments?

Ms. GOLDEN. That's right.

Senator INOUYE. And the other one is not available at all?

Ms. GOLDEN. I don't think the other one is administered within ACF, so I will try to find the information and we'll get back to you on it—oh, it's the same information, I'm sorry.

Senator INOUYE. Would you like to have it available to tribal governments?

Ms. GOLDEN. If that is a direction in which the committee is interested in going, we would be glad to look into it and offer you information about it. I don't think we have a position at this point.

Senator INOUYE. Thank you.

Mr. Bushman, you have close ties with Indian country. What is your assessment of the welfare reform program? Is it working?

Mr. BUSHMAN. Senator, before I answer that question I would like to just take a brief opportunity to belatedly wish Senator Campbell a happy birthday.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you believe 28 years old? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUSHMAN. As you know, Senator, I worked for this committee for almost 3 years, and oftentimes during the committee hearings—and even during this hearing—hearings often sound to me like academic exercises. But what really is at stake with welfare reform in Indian country, in my estimation, is the future of our most vulnerable citizens: our elderly, our children, our disabled.

I heard it said last week, and I've heard it before and I've heard it recently from tribal TANF recipients on a recent visit to California, that they feel that as a TANF recipient—and prior to that, collecting AFDC, and I've also experienced this in my own family—that they are a "nobody" people from a "nobody" place, and nobody cares about them.

If welfare reform is going to succeed in Indian country, I believe that this legislation provides us with a tremendous opportunity to take care of these most vulnerable people.

Is it working? I think it is too early to tell. I think we have taken some important first steps, but we have a long way to go, and you will hear from other witnesses that can share their perspective better than I can from the local level. But we are doing everything that we possibly can, given the resources that are available to us and to the tribes, to make this thing work.

Senator INOUYE. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Ms. Golden.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you

We thank you for appearing. I might just say, the concept of welfare reform is for people to be able to go to work, but you have a whole different set of circumstances on reservations. It's a dead end to say, "Well, we're going to get people off welfare" if there are no jobs. Of course, one of the missions of this committee, particularly with Senator Inouye and me, is to try to find ways in which the atmosphere can be created so that jobs can flourish, without the Government mandating them. The fact is that we can't, unless we just make more Government jobs, and that's not truly in the free enterprise system. We have to create a system by which the business community in America can work cooperative agreements with tribes to create those jobs so that they will be there for Indian people who come off of welfare.

But one thing I might mention before you leave, we have passed numerous bills that Senator Inouye has worked on, and Senator McCain before him, and me now, to try to increase the ability of Indian people to really become self-sufficient. Some of the things we passed are off to good starts. Unfortunately, with some of them, tribes come back after they have been in place for a year or more and tell us that they didn't know about them. We can pass the legislation, but that has to be your agenda from there on, that the tribes are aware of the things that they can avail themselves of, whether it's the TANF Program or whatever.

So I would just encourage you that when things do come out of this committee and we do get it into law and the President does sign it and it is passed over to those folks who are supposed to administer it, that we need to do a lot better job of informing the tribes of the things that they can do, that are available to them.

Ms. GOLDEN. I appreciate that, Senator.

The one thing that I would perhaps ask for your help on along those lines is that I do believe that the flexibility of the TANF dollars and the fact that they are really available for economic development, job creation, strategies that work with businesses—I believe that neither tribes nor States fully understand that, and we're working hard to get the message out and would really welcome any assistance that the members of the committee are able to give us.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I just point that out because a few years ago we passed legislation to allow the Veterans Administration to give low-interest home loans to Indian veterans living on the reservation. Before that time it hadn't been done, and it was done through that law by letting the Federal Government enter into memorandums of understanding with the tribes.

We went back about 2 years later and checked on the number of individual Indian veterans who had availed themselves of that, and I think there were only six, six people after 2 years, when it could be done with any tribe in the country and could affect literally thousands of American Indian veterans. So that tells me that we're not doing a very good job of telling them what they can avail themselves of.

We thank you for your appearance.

Ms. GOLDEN. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The next panel will be Andrew Grey, Chairman, Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribal Council; Ron Allen, President, National Congress of American Indians; Dr. Taylor McKenzie, Vice President of the Navajo Nation—and I might add, an honest-to-God Indian pioneer, if I can use that oxymoron, because Dr. McKenzie was the first American Indian surgeon, and we're very proud of him; and Eddie Brown, formerly of the administration—I wondered where you went, Eddie. [Laughter.]

Eddie is now Associate Dean of American Indian Studies program at George Warren Brown University. We are delighted to have you here.

As with the other panels, all of your written testimony will be included in the record, and if you would abbreviate your comments, we would appreciate that.

We will go ahead and start with Chairman Grey.

STATEMENT OF ANDREW GREY, SR., CHAIRMAN, SISSETON-WAHPETON SIOUX TRIBAL COUNCIL AGENCY VILLAGE, SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. GREY. Good afternoon, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Vice Chairman, and members of the committee. My name is Andrew Grey and I am Chairman of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe. The tribe has an enrollment of 10,227 members, with 45 percent of them living on the reservation or near the reservation. The unemployment rate is approximately 50 percent, but the poverty rate is over 60 percent, according to the 1990 census.

Lack of jobs, basic education, skill training, child care facilities, transportation, and substance abuse are the major barriers to employment for many tribal members.

In March 1994 the tribe started its 477 demonstration project. In October 1997, the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families Program, or TANF, was integrated into the 477 program. In March of this year the tribe embarked on another historic course by entering into a cooperative agreement with the State of South Dakota for child support enforcement services on the Lake Traverse Reservation. Hopefully, this agreement will defray some of the expenses associated with administering a welfare program.

Currently the tribe has integrated 10 programs into 477.

It should be noted that the tribe does not receive State matching funds for TANF. The 477 approach to delivering employment and training services was the main reason behind the tribal council's decision to administer its own welfare programs. Integration has greatly reduced the tribe's administrative burden, thus staff have more time to improve the effectiveness of services.

Additionally, the 477 program has and continues to be the major player in support of tribal economic development. In 1995, 22 of 29 participants entered into employment as a result of the 477 initiative to support tribal economic development. In 1997, the 477 program was able to assist 106 individuals with supportive services, which enabled them to obtain and retain employment. The end result of this effort was a 22-percent reduction in AFDC caseload.

In October 1998 the tribe began expanding its gaming enterprise. This expansion would create 40 new jobs for tribal members. In December 1998, the 477, in collaboration with the Sisseton-Wahpeton Community College, developed a 120-hour intensive job readiness training course, specifically tailored to welfare recipients, in hotel management. As of April 1, the hotel management has hired 15 TANF recipients who graduated from this training.

Support for economic development would not have happened if the tribe had not had a 477 program. In an average month, four welfare recipients are placed into unsubsidized employment. This success has not reduced the tribe's welfare caseload; the caseload has remained relatively constant. This can be attributed to the following reasons.

No. 1, is the constant influx of new cases.

No. 2, the program has a 45-percent reoccurrence rate among welfare cases.

No. 3, is lack of support from non-custodial parents.

We are in the planning stages of how to best address the problems with child care. Solving child care problems will require a commitment of tribal resources. Additionally, the tribe needs funds to plan and provide services to non-custodial parents. Currently, the 477 program does not have the resources to address all the employment and training needs of custodial parents, as well as the needs of those who are unemployed, underemployed, and economically disadvantaged.

On behalf of the tribal council I would like to make the following recommendations to improve the 477 initiative and better equip the tribes to deal with the impact of welfare reform:

No. 1, that Congress reauthorize the Welfare-to-Work program through 2002, with an increase in the tribal set-aside. Funding for tribal programs should be set at not less than 3 percent of the funds available;

No. 2, if Welfare-to-Work legislation is reauthorized and if a State does not apply for formula funding, the new legislation should provide that the tribe has the right to receive a proportionate share;

No. 3, that the BIA and other Federal agencies provide financial support for the technical assistance efforts of the 477 Tribal Work Group;

No, 4, that the BIA ensure adequate staff resources to properly support the 477; initiative; and

No. 5, that Congress amend the Personal Responsibility Act to allow HHS to modify the TANF reporting requirements. Current reporting requirements place a heavy administrative burden on tribes. The TANF reporting requirements should be based upon tribal circumstances instead of State requirements.

In conclusion, I would like to state that the tribe is very concerned about what will happen between now and the year 2002. Tribal welfare caseloads have not experienced a reduction. It should also be noted that the provision which disregards 1 month's welfare assistance received by an adult living on an Indian reservation with a 50-percent unemployment rate does not apply on the Lake Traverse Reservation. The tribe sincerely believes that it best knows the needs of its people and can best determine how to address those needs, and it has made a very concerted effort with limited resources to reduce the impact of welfare reform on our reservation. Any reduction in funding will severely hamper the tribe's efforts and have a very negative impact on the poor quality of life now being experienced by many of our tribal members.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I thank you for giving me this opportunity to testify.

[Prepared statement of Mr. Grey appears in appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. I thank you.

We will go on with Ron Allen.

STATEMENT OF W. RON ALLEN, PRESIDENT, NATIONAL CONGRESS OF AMERICAN INDIANS, WASHINGTON, DC

Mr. ALLEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Vice Chairman. On behalf of the National Congress of American Indians, we are appreciative of the opportunity to be here and testify before this committee on the welfare reform legislation and its implementation.

Without a doubt, this legislation is a critical issue in our communities. Listening to your opening statement and the opening statement of Senator Inouye, it is clear that you understand the problems that tribal governments have with regard to the implementation of this law. When it was originated, the authors did not take into adequate consideration the unique political situation of tribes in their relationships with State governments, and that clearly is a problem. It always has been a problem, and it will be a problem until we can more effectively address it. We have to consider some adjustment to the legislation.

I will get into that a little bit more, but I want to point out that this legislation does treat tribes disproportionately. It does not take into consideration the unique situation of the tribes and their lack of resources, and as a regular observation, the inadequate infrastructure that they have in order to address these problems. The situation, like at Sisseton-Wahpeton, is often very common in Indian country, and we cannot allow Congress or the administration to have a perception that Indian country is doing well because a few tribes are doing well. We are still under a great struggle over advancing our economic development and advancing our industries to create jobs in our communities, and that is with a great deal of difficulty.

We believe that the law did not take into consideration the fact that if the tribes are going to take over these TANF Programs, it is expensive. It is an expensive endeavor. It left them to the will of the States, whether or not the States would actually contribute moneys or contribute technical assistance, or whether or not the administration would provide the kind of technical assistance necessary to gear themselves up.

On a separate track, it also made assumptions that there were going to be plenty of jobs or that there were going to be lots of new opportunities on our reservations, and that simply hasn't been the fact on the majority of our reservations. That is something that the other agencies or departments in this administration haven't risen up to, to assist those tribes in becoming more self-sufficient.

We applaud the options or opportunities that you have been introducing, but they have yet to take seed in any meaningful way to help deal with that kind of problem.

We believe that the act, in terms of being reauthorized or reconsidered, does need to take into consideration the tribes' situation. We do want you to take a look at the requirements of the States and not allow the States to be in a position to dictate to the tribes what kind of conditions that they will be supportive of, for the tribes to serve their communities. That is a major issue.

Another technical issue, one that is simple, is the carry-over moneys, making sure the tribes can carry the money over into the subsequent years that aren't actually used. Most often that's not the case, but when the cases are out there, they should have that authority. Unfortunately, often administrative lawyers will read laws that you guys dictate for policy and read them narrowly in the interest of the tribes, and unfortunately that is to our disadvantage, and that really needs to be addressed.

I think it is important for us to address the consultation process. It has not been adequate. I do understand that the Administration has been trying to reach out to the tribes, but it has not been sufficient. I think that they need to be more thorough and more thoughtful in terms of how they reach out to the tribes.

As you have heard in many of our forums, it is not easy to communicate and coordinate with tribes from Alaska to Florida, but there are ways in which we can work with the administration to achieve that objective so that the consultation and coordination over the implementation of this law and the establishing of the regulations are more thoughtful and more reasonable relative to the tribes' interest. That simply has to be the case.

Another example that is related is the consultation process with regard to tribes under General Assistance. Over in the BIA, that is related to TANF, because if the eligibilities of the TANF Programs exhaust themselves and the tribes become dependent on these limited GA programs that are over in the BIA, then that's a major issue in terms of how you can use it and how you cannot use it. But those regulations were not managed in an effective way.

But we do need to improve that consultation process. We do need to engage in it more effectively and more thoroughly. It is not too late to backtrack a few steps and to consult with the tribes in terms of how to achieve that objective.

So I would urge that this committee would urge the administration to advance an effort here to amend the legislation in a way that is useful. I know it's going to be difficult, but in a way that is more sensitive to the tribes in respect to the tribes' objectives of addressing their communities.

I don't want to end my comments without saying that in my opinion, these obligations are relative to historical, legal, and moral obligations that are in the treaties and so forth. The United States has an obligation to address this issue in a meaningful and thoughtful way, and we urge this committee to assist us in making that happen.

Thank you.

[Prepared statement of Mr. Allen appears in appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. Thank you.

Dr. McKenzie.

STATEMENT OF TAYLOR McKENZIE, M.D., VICE PRESIDENT, NAVAJO NATION, WINDOW ROCK, AZ, ACCOMPANIED BY ALEX YAZZA, DIRECTOR, TANF PROGRAM, NAVAJO NATION

Dr. MCKENZIE. Thank you, Chairman Campbell and honorable members of the committee on Indian Affairs and staff and panelists and honored guests. I am Taylor McKenzie, Vice President of the Navajo Nation. Just a very minor adjustment: I am the first Navajo to have received an M.D. degree and trained as a surgeon. I have with me to assist me in the event that a complicated question comes up, Alex Yazza, who is Director of the TANF Program for the Navajo Nation.

It is an honor to come before you today to give testimony on behalf of the Navajo Nation regarding welfare reform in Indian country. Our request on presentation is fairly simple and straightforward. The Navajo Nation is dissatisfied with the provisions of Public Law 104–193, Section 412, which limits the Navajo Nation to basically no funds available for program administration. The impact of administering a cash assistance program without the same consideration given to the States sets the stage for failure of tribal Temporary Assistance for Needy Families Programs on Indian reservations. Let me give you an example.

Our reservation is situated in three States, Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah. This relationship is complex and challenging. The geographical size of the Navajo Nation and the sparse, rural areas make programming of new services and programs difficult in developing budgets and financing operations.

Section 412 does not offer funding which allows the Navajo Nation to establish the tribal TANF Program effectively. There are no start-up funds, indirect cost funds, contract support costs, nor reimbursable costs associated with starting a new program, nor other incentive funds which are allowed in the administration of State TANF Programs. It is imperative that the Navajo Nation receive these funds in order to properly address the welfare reform initiative.

Historically, the Navajo Nation has administered and operated Indian self-determination programs under Public Law 93–638, as amended. In 1994, Congress amended the law to provide Indian tribes more flexibility and autonomy in designing a program for services to better meet the needs of our Indian people. The Navajo Nation submitted a 638 contract proposal to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services for the TANF Program, but our request was denied. It ended up in Federal District Court in Phoenix, AZ. On March 9, 1999, the Nation was informed of the Judge's decision to dismiss the case, concluding that > TANF is not a contractible program under 638 because it is not a program which requires the Federal Government to directly provide services to Indian tribes in the event the Indian tribe elects not to apply for the funding itself.

This decision results in a wide discrepancy between the new welfare reform law and the self-determination law. The Navajo Nation intends to further argue and appeal the case and bring an action to overturn this decision in the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. The Navajo Nation believes that TANF Programs should be contractible under Public Law 93–638. We believe that Congress should have included provisions to authorize Indian tribes to contract their TANF Programs under Public Law 93–638, as amended.

I address this point to you to emphasize the importance of maintaining the government-to-government relationship that exists through the treaty obligations between the Navajo Nation and the United States Government. The Navajo Nation, along with many Indian tribes across this continent, believes that the new welfare reform law is too lax and does not include the same provisions as given to the States to administer the States' TANF Programs. In fact, the proposed rules and regulations for the tribal TANF Programs are not final, although tribes have responded to the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking in November 1998.

I testify before you today to underscore the fact that the Federal Government has not properly consulted with Indian tribes in developing the tribal TANF provisions under the new law. There is a lack of coordination and cooperation between the Federal Government and the Indian tribes on welfare reform. The tribes are forced to strengthen their relationship with the State TANF administration, which is happening, but not with the Department of Health and Human Services and other Federal agencies as it should.

Finally, the Navajo Nation submits to this committee an appeal to amend the law to include the same provisions that are granted to States, and to make the law more flexible for Indian tribes. Today we join our brothers and sisters to campaign for change in the law which will treat Indian tribes as sovereign nations. We are offering a proposed amendment to 25 USC 450, Section 14, directing funding under a grant for Indian tribes, and it reads, Congress authorizes Indian tribes to contract for the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families Program under Public Law 93–638, as amended, the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, as otherwise known, and further directs the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to make the tribal TANF funds available to Indian tribes pursuant to Public Law 93–638.

Mr. Chairman and members of the esteemed committee, thank you for this opportunity to address these many important issues on behalf of the Navajo people.

Just one final and perhaps unrelated request——

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor, we're going to have to move on.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Brown.

STATEMENT OF EDDIE F. BROWN, ASSOCIATE DEAN, AMERICAN INDIAN STUDIES, GEORGE WARREN BROWN SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY, ST. LOUIS, MO, ACCOMPANIED BY SHANTA PANDEY, ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR OF THE CENTER FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT, WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Vice Chairman, we want to thank you for the invitation to share some of our early welfare reform research findings. We have submitted for the record a copy of our full testimony, as well as our first year's research findings report, titled "Early Evidence from Arizona."

As noted, my name is Eddie Brown, and I am accompanied today by Shanta Pandey, Associate Director of the Center for Social Development, also of the George Warren Brown School of Social Work, Washington University. Ms. Pandey has put her knowledge of research and statistical analysis in working with us. She serves as Principal Investigator of our research project, and I serve as co-Principal.

Now, as far as we know, we have the only HHS-funded study in the country engaged in monitoring the impact of TANF services on American Indian reservations. Our goal is to inform the public policy debate on strengths and weaknesses of the 1996 welfare reform legislation as it develops on American Indian reservations.

Our testimony today, that has been submitted for the record, includes secondary data from administrative sources, as well as in-depth telephone interviews and focus groups with tribal and State service providers and tribal welfare recipients. Also, now in our second year of our study, we are currently conducting interviews with individual welfare recipients from three selected reservations in Arizona, and have included a few preliminary findings in this report as well.

Because of the time constraint, we will just briefly highlight, and I am going to highlight some and I want to have Ms. Pandey highlight others.

No. 1, as far as administration, we know that tribes are excited about welfare reform, contrary to some statements that tribes were reluctant. They are excited about it; however, because of the complexity of the legislation—it being new, the multiple funding sources, multiple programs, as well as work requirements, time limits, et cetera—tribes have been very cautious and are taking their time to analyze the situation before jumping in.

Currently, three of the 21 tribes of Arizona administer their own TANF services. However, other Arizona tribes have indicated their interest to submit their tribal plans within the next few years, once their investigations and analyses, as well as negotiations with the State and Federal Governments, are satisfactory.

It should be pointed out that tribal administrators have stated that the legislation fails to treat tribes on a par with the States, and I think this is in three critical ways.

First, States are allowed to keep their unexpended TANF funds for future use, but tribes must return any unexpended Federal funds to the Federal Government within 2 years.

Second, States receive bonuses for reducing out-of-wedlock births and for high performance, as well as supplemental grants for population increases, and they also have access to contingency funds, whereas tribes are not eligible to receive any of these bonuses or incentives.

And third, when PROWA was passed, a limited amount of funding was set aside to evaluate the performance. As a result, not all States received Federal dollars for evaluating their performance. The funding is scarcer at the tribal level. A tribe implementing their own TANF services within that State may not receive any money to evaluate their performance.

Also, tribes administering their own TANF programs may not receive State matching funds. It is important to note that 13 of the 19 tribal communities currently administering TANF services come from States that provide some sort of State matching funds. We believe that this evidence underscores the importance of providing matching funds to expedite tribal takeover of TANF services.

Also noted, as pointed out by the Navajo Tribe, is that tribes wishing to administer TANF services receive no support costs or start-up money. Tribal leaders and service providers interviewed expressed strong concerns that the devolution of responsibility for TANF administration without commensurate allocation of financial resources to the tribes may severely hinder the legislation's intended effect.

I want to cover a few more, but because of time I also want to turn that over to Shanta Pandey to make one or two statements in regard to——

The CHAIRMAN. That's all right; if you want to continue, we will give her an equal amount of time.

Mr. BROWN. Okay. Well, let me finish this one more thing.

We feel that Arizona's administrators, as well as other States'—and this is a qualifier—who have worked to develop good relationships with the tribes have found that it is advantageous to ensure the coordination and provision of TANF services and related services with tribal governments. In these States that have developed positive relationships with tribes, we find that the legislation has strengthened the coordination and communication and collaboration at all levels among tribal social service providers, between States and tribes, between tribes and the Federal Government. At the tribal level, for instance, coordination, collaboration and communication have increased among the staffs of social services, their employment training, child care, and education.

We believe that this is an early positive effect of TANF legislation, and will assist in improving future tribal efforts to serve families and children in need.

Let me turn the time over now to Ms. Pandey, who will address individual concerns.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay, Ms.. Pandey.

Ms. PANDEY. Mr. Chairman, Senators, and members of the committee, I will highlight the changes at the individual level under the 1996 welfare reform legislation.

Like States, the reservations also experienced a decline in the number of households receiving TANF between 1995 and 1998. But the rate of decline was less rapid on reservations. On reservations, the number of households receiving TANF dropped by 13 percentage points, whereas within the State of Arizona it declined by 41 percent.

It is important to note that not all reservations experienced a decline in the number of households receiving TANF. Four tribes had an increase in the number of households receiving, TANF, and these tribes are Colorado River, Hualapai, Pascua Yaqui, and San Carlos. Six tribes had a decrease in the number of households receiving TANF, and these tribes are Gila River, Hopi, Navajo Nation, Tohono O'odham, and White Mountain Apache. I must note that the Navajo Nation is the Arizona portion of the Navajo Nation; we don't know about the other portion of the Navajo Nation.

Seven tribes are nearly welfare-independent in that there are less than seven households on TANF, and these tribes are Ak Chin, Cocopah, Fort McDowell, Fort Mojave, Havasupai, Kaibab Paiute, and Yavapai-Apache.

With regards to sanctions, some families on reservations have experienced sanctions. Between January 1998 and January 1999, 623 cases were 25 percent sanctioned, indicating that these cases lost 25 percent of their cash assistance. During the same time period, 517 cases lost 50 percent of their benefit, were sanctioned 50 percent, and 382 cases were closed due to sanctions, resulting in 100 percent loss of their cash benefit.

With regards to time limit, the State of Arizona waived the 2-year time limit for all residences with 50 percent or higher proportion of adults not employed. As a result, a very small proportion of TANF recipients have been removed from TANF Programs due to the 2-year time limit.

To understand how families are faring under the new welfare law, we are in the process of interviewing 400 families. We have not completed interviewing all of them, but we do have some preliminary results, and we wanted to share those briefly with you.

With regards to employment, of the current or former recipients that on whom we have completed interviews, only 14 percent were working at the time of the interview.

With regards to transportation, 30 percent had a vehicle of their own.

With regards to child care, of those women who had children under 13, only 2 percent were using formal child care or day care centers.

With regards to education, only 16 percent had completed high school.

With regards——

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Pandey, if you would turn all those statistics in, the committee will go over them separately.

Ms. PANDEY. Okay. I'm almost done.

With regards to job experience, only 47 percent had worked, ever, for pay.

Many of them did not have telephones.

At the end I wanted to just say that if we want to see the TANF Programs succeed on the reservations, we not only have to improve the child care facilities, transportation, but also the job opportunities at the same time.

Thank you.

[Joint prepared statement of Mr. Brown and Ms. Pandey appears in appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Let me ask you a few questions, and I am sure Senator Inouye has some, too.

I will start with Chairman Grey. I am really interested in the business start-ups that you've done on the reservation. As I understand it, there is a hotel and some manufacturing and a casino, is that correct?

Mr. GREY. Right, Mr. Chairman. On the Sisseton-Wahpeton Reservation we do have a plastic bag factory that employs around 40 to 50 people.

The CHAIRMAN. Who do you market to?

Mr. GREY. We are just now getting into McDonalds and that type of thing.

We have three casinos, one in North Dakota and two in South Dakota. One is a gas station and C-store, so we do provide employment there.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the nearest non-Indian community of people that come to use the casino? Is that Sioux Falls? Would that be the closest one?

Mr. GREY. Probably, yes, Sioux Falls and Fargo and Watertown. I think that's a major concern of ours, that if anything happens to gaming, we will have about 400 people unemployed on the reservation, so we are looking at different economic development ventures.

The CHAIRMAN. You mentioned that you have a hotel management training. That's done through your local college, you said?

Mr. GREY. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Do your most of your trainees end up working in the tribal hotel? Or does that qualify them so that they can go out and get a job in hotels in Sioux Falls or somewhere else?

Mr. GREY. Both.

The CHAIRMAN. They do that? You've had some members who have gone out and used that experience that they've gotten in your college to get jobs in other hotels?

Mr. GREY. Right. It helps them.

The CHAIRMAN. Very good.

You also mentioned that there is a 22-percent reduction in AFDC caseloads. Was that correct?

Mr. GREY. That was, I think, in 1997 when we opened up our big casino. That year we employed 106 people, I think, off our TANF, so it did reduce our welfare caseload that year substantially.

The CHAIRMAN. And last, how many youngsters are in your college?

Mr. GREY. I hesitate to even guess. I don't have those figures, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, there's certainly a correlation between getting jobs and the reduction in AFDC; at least, I think that there is.

I would guess that teen pregnancy, high school dropouts, and so on have also been a big problem within the tribe. Has that situation improved since there have been more job opportunities?

Mr. GREY. I think those statistics are mainly staying the same. They're not improving that much.

The CHAIRMAN. You have a high birth rate in the tribe. I know I've visited some tribes recently where one-fourth of the whole tribal population is under 16 years old.

Mr. GREY. Right. That's the same way with Sisseton-Wahpeton.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Ron, it's now 3 years since welfare reform was enacted. I said earlier that one of the problems that we face is that we put things in legislation, but the tribes don't seem to hear about it. Do you believe that's one of the problems with the TANF Programs, that they just don't know about them or don't know what they can avail themselves of?

Mr. ALLEN. Without a doubt, Senator. It seems like it's almost a historical problem for us, that a key piece of legislation gets enacted, and the tribes—the issue of how those pieces of legislation address tribal governments is almost dealt with in what I would call an "afterthought policy." We are often there, interacting with the Senate and the House on these pieces of legislation, but they seem to be moving so fast and they're being driven by the States or those kinds of interests, and when they get around to how do they address the same responsibilities to the tribal governments, they just sort of drive it in there. So it's like trying to push a square peg into a round hole. It doesn't work. We're not the same as the State government, as you well know, so they keep forgetting that our resource and infrastructural base is not the same. This is another great example, where they deliberated on this act and its objectives with regard to Indian country way too late. If it wasn't for work like Mr. Brown and others to show where the deficiencies are, Congress might move along, not realizing that there's a real problem out there in our communities.

We believe we can offer you some good suggestions on how to move it.

The CHAIRMAN. As you know, we're trying to frame up some technical amendments to the legislation, so anything that you can provide to help us, we would be glad to look at.

Mr. ALLEN. One other point administratively that can help is that the Tribal Services Division that HHS has set up to address this, they do need their own budget. They need better resources. And in conjunction with that, we need better technical assistance. I think that all of our witnesses here are in concurrence that even today, 3 years later, we still need a significant amount of technical assistance out there to assist our governments and staff to gear up to deal with this program.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. I thank you.

Dr. McKenzie, maybe you could tell us, since we're talking a little bit about State-to-tribal relations with the TANF Programs, what's the difference in matching funds provided by different States? You work with four States, or the Navajo Tribe is in four States?

Dr. MCKENZIE. I'm going to ask Alex to answer that.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. Would you identify your full name for the record, Alex?

Mr. YAZZA. Good afternoon, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee. My name is Alex Yazza. I am the Project Director for the Navajo Nation TANF Project.

To answer your question, Mr. Chairman, we are currently engaged in a dialog with the three States, Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah. Arizona, last year in their legislation, provided a provision for Indian tribes with tribally-approved TANF plans to provide State match funds. So that provision has been made by the State of Arizona.

With the State of New Mexico, quite interestingly, Navajo is the only tribe thus far that has applied for TANF. I think the Zuni Nation is applying. But overall, just in this past New Mexico legislation, submitted a bill to them to consider State match funds for the Navajo Nation. Now, that's still undergoing review, and there's a special session that is coming up the first part of May at which they will discuss that bill.

With the State of Utah, we have a verbal commitment from them that they would provide State match dollars to us, but that hasn't come forth in terms of legislation.

So with all three States combined, it seems to me that we have that opportunity to request the State match dollars from each State.

The CHAIRMAN. The Navajo Nation has petitioned—if either one of you can answer this—has petitioned HHS to contract the TANF Program using self-determination contracts. What's the status of that petition?

Dr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, it went through the courts in Phoenix, and the last court that deliberated on it dismissed it, and we propose now to appeal that and argue further for reversal of that decision.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Dr. Brown, you made a number of recommendations in your testimony, and if you would frame those up, if you have some suggested amendments to the present law which would lead to a more effective TANF Program, I would appreciate it if you would do that.

Just in general, since you've been back out there in what I call the "real world" since you left the Government here, what do you consider the greatest barriers to employment of tribal members?

Mr. BROWN. That could be simply no jobs.

The CHAIRMAN. No jobs?

Mr. BROWN. There is no employment out there, and the need—if you look at it, there are three critical elements needed in welfare reform. First, you have to have the training and education. Second, because you're dealing with welfare reform recipients, you have to have those support services to help them transition from welfare to work. But the missing element——

The CHAIRMAN. You've got to have someplace to go.

Mr. BROWN [continuing]. Is economic development and job creation.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, the States are eligible to receive incentives for good performance under TANF Program guidelines, but they often use tribal members to enhance their record. Can tribes do that, too?

Mr. BROWN. No; they do not have access to any of those bonuses——

The CHAIRMAN. How does it happen that the States can——

Mr. BROWN [continuing]. Or grants or funds, but the State can use and benefit from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The awards are available to tribes?

Mr. BROWN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. They're not?

Mr. BROWN. If you look at any of the bonuses, the high performance bonus, as well as grants, it is clear in the law that for any of those, the tribes are not eligible, other than for some of the loan programs. But in the other bonuses and incentives, they are not eligible for them.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we have to change that, too.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. I thank you.

Senator Inouye, did you have further questions?

Senator INOUYE. Mr. Chairman, I have a whole slew of questions that I would like to submit for response.

The CHAIRMAN. Fine. If we could have you answer those in writing to the committee, to Senator Inouye.

Senator INOUYE. I have just one question I would like to ask at this time.

Much of the publicity nationally is on casinos, and one would get the impression that Indian nations are extremely wealthy. But these statistics just apply to a small handful of Indian tribes, and most of the tribes are still living in Third World conditions. In fact, the average unemployment rate in Indian country is in excess of 50 percent.

Now, there is a provision in this act that says that the limitation for beneficiaries would be 2 years, but if your unemployment on the reservation exceeds 50 percent, then you can extend it. But it doesn't make sense, because most of the tribes are in the 45, 40, 35, 30 percent range. Our national average is less than 5 percent.

What if we set it at 30 percent, which would cover, I would say, over one-half of the tribes? Would you go for that, Mr. President?

Mr. ALLEN. I was thinking more like 15 percent. [Laughter.]

Well, 30 percent, without a doubt——

Senator INOUYE. With Ron Allen, it never fails; I give him 25, he takes 20. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. Without a doubt, it would help us dramatically. It was unreasonable. It was not logical when they inserted that 50 percent. Clearly it helped some tribes, but a lot of those tribes that fall within that 30 to 50 percent range—and there are a lot of them—they need help, and they have the problems that you've been hearing about. So it would be very helpful.

Senator INOUYE. I think that is one of the amendments that this committee will propose a technical amendment. About 25 percent; how is that?

Mr. ALLEN. Twenty. [Laughter.]

Senator INOUYE. Well, Mr. Chairman I thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. I thank this panel for appearing. I would remind you that the record will stay open for 2 weeks; if you have additional comments or any suggested amendments, or technical amendments, we would appreciate it if you could get those in. Senator Inouye and I both have a couple more questions that we will submit in writing. If you could answer those in writing, we would appreciate it.

With that, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 2:58 p.m., the committee was adjourned, to reconvene at the call of the Chair.]

APPENDIX

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL SUBMITTED FOR THE RECORD

PREPARED STATEMENT OF OLIVIA GOLDEN, ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Good afternoon Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. I am pleased to be here today to discuss welfare reform, especially as it relates to tribal families. The Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 [PRWORA] focuses on work and critical supports for work [in particular child care and child support]. It offers tribes a range of important new choices in designing welfare, child care and child support programs that will provide the maximum opportunities to tribal families. We have sought to work closely with tribes as they implement these provisions in the full spirit of government-to-government relationships.

At the Federal, State, tribal and community level, new relationships are being forged. Early findings of research conducted by Dr. Eddie Brown with the Washington University School of Social Work and funded by the Administration for Children and Families indicate that "communication, coordination, and collaboration among tribes, between tribes and States and tribes and the Federal Government has increased." Governments are collaborating with businesses, community organizations, transportation providers, the media and religious leaders to help move families to work. At the Federal level, we are focused on helping tribes, states and communities move families to work, be accountable for results, and develop and share information about effective practices. Together as partners, we must build upon these early efforts to find effective ways to improve the lives of children and families.

Today, I would like to provide an overview of the changes made by welfare reform, child support and child care as they affect tribes and discuss the work we are doing to ensure that welfare reform is successful for tribes and tribal families. While it is too early in the implementation of these programs to provide information on outcomes and results for tribal families, I would also like to use this opportunity to share some promising activities we are hearing, about.

Statutory Changes

As I indicated, PRWORA made a number of significant changes that directly affect tribes and tribal families.

First, under welfare reform the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families [TANF] program replaces the former Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] program and provides States and tribes with unprecedented flexibility to design welfare programs to meet the particular needs of families in moving to work and self-sufficiency. Tribal governments, at their option, may receive direct Federal funding to independently design, administer, and operate the TANF program or may choose to allow States to continue providing these services to tribal families.

In addition to the creation of TANF under this reform legislation, the former Tribal JOBS program was replaced with the Native Employment Works [NEW] program. The NEW program provides funding for tribes and inter-tribal consortia to design and administer tribal work activities that meet the unique employment and training needs of their populations while allowing States to provide all the other TANF services.

States and tribes that administer their own TANF or NEW programs have the flexibility to design their programs, define who will be eligible, establish what benefits and services will be available, and develop their own strategies for achieving program goals, including how to help recipients become self-sufficient. Further, PRWORA provided tribes with expanded child care funding and broader authority to administer the child support program. Therefore, tribes can enter into new partnerships with States to ensure that tribal families receive the support services necessary to become self-sufficient.

How Statutory Changes are Affecting Tribal Programs

TRIBAL ADMINISTERED TANF AND NEW PROGRAMS

The new law specifically allows tribes to administer the TANF program and in such cases Federal TANF funds are allocated directly to the tribe. While the law requires that tribes meet certain goals in these programs, it also allows them to negotiate applicable work participation rates with the Secretary, taking into account the limited resources and employment opportunities available in the tribal community.

Since the President signed PRWORA in 1996, we have provided considerable assistance to the tribes and have approved, 19 tribal TANF programs. These TANF programs involve 62 Indian Tribes and Alaska Native Villages, and operate in 12 States. The programs are serving approximately 3,500 families, or over 13,500 individuals. There are an additional 7 plans pending which would involve an additional 78 tribes and villages and affect over 35,000 more people.

Supported by HHS policy, all 12 States in which tribes are operating their own TANF program are providing some form of assistance to the tribes, similar to the maintenance of effort dollars supporting State programs. Nine States are providing supplemental funds [Oregon, Arizona, California, Wyoming, Washington, Alaska, Idaho, Minnesota and Montana]. The remaining three States are providing other resources such as computers, staff training, and connection to their State reporting systems. In addition, several States I have out-stationed State employees to these tribal TANF programs to assist in eligibility assessments of TANF applicants for other State services.

Tribes are afforded even greater flexibility than States in designing their programs and like States are making varied choices to meet their own unique circumstances. Time limits on benefit receipt vary: 17 plans allow for 60 months of benefits, with the remaining 2 months allowing 24 months within an 84 month period. Under the work requirements, participation rates and the number of hours of work required per week also vary from plan to plan. Four tribes adopted the same participation rates the law requires of States [25 percent in the first year, increasing to 50 percent by the fifth year for all families and 75 percent in the first year, increasing to 90 percent in the third year for two-parent families]. These tribes also adopted the same minimum work requirements States are subject to meet. The remaining tribes exercised their option to negotiate different rates of participation and work hours and adopted a fairly wide range of rates.

Tribes have developed a variety of service strategies that respond to the unique circumstances of each community. One tribe used casino revenues to build an "Independent Life Skills Center," to house the Tribal TANF program. This center also provides classrooms, a computer learning lab, a secure records facility, office space, and a children's play area for use by TANF recipients. Another tribe, with joint funding provided by the TANF program and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, provides a "One-Stop" and a "point of contact" service center for applicants requesting assistance and maintains a toll free 24-hour voice mail service which can be utilized by TANF recipients and service providers alike in serving recipients living in remote areas.

Under the NEW program, the statute restricts eligibility to tribes and Alaska Native organizations that were operating JOBS programs in fiscal year 1995. Currently, all 78 eligible tribal grantees are operating NEW programs. Total funding for these programs Is $7.6 million per year with a significant variation in the size of the individual grants [ranging from just over $5,000 to $1.7 million].

In addition, the Welfare-to-Work program administered by the Department of Labor provides grants to Indian tribes to help move long-term, hard to employ welfare recipients into last unsubsidized employment. In fiscal year 1998, 86 tribes received grants totaling $12.3 million. Recognizing the challenges facing Native Americans moving from welfare to work, the President's proposal to reauthorize the Welfare-to-Work programs would increase the amount of WTW formula funds available for tribes and would allow tribes to apply directly to DOL for WTW competitive grants [currently they must apply in conjunction with other entities].

STATE ADMINISTERED TANF PROGRAMS

In the remaining areas of the country, tribal families are served by State TANF programs. In these areas, tribal communities and tribal members are subject to the same responsibilities and eligible for the same opportunities that a State elects for its population at large. As we learn more about the effect these service design choices are having on tribal families, we certainly will share this information with the committee. This type of outcome data is particularly important in light of the unique challenges to self-sufficiency faced by tribal families related to high unemployment and lack of transportation and child care assistance.

As a start in gathering this critical data, in fiscal year 1997, ACF approved a 5-year research and evaluation project entitled "Welfare to Work: Monitoring the Impact of Welfare Reform on American Indian Families with Children." The overall purposes of this longitudinal study are to monitor and document the implementation, and assess the impact, of welfare reform on American Indian families and reservations in Arizona resulting from the State and tribal responses to TANF. Extensive demographic, contextual, socio-economic and case-level data will be compiled from a variety of sources, including administrative records, tribal documents, interviews and site visits.

One of the preliminary findings of the study is that many tribes while interested in self-administration of the program, are unsure about the best strategy to follow. They are interested in learning form the experiences of other tribes in order to examine their options and make informed choices.

On another front, a component of HHS's evaluation of the Department of Labor's Welfare to Work Grant program will examine what activities and services tribes provide, and how various tribal programs are coordinated at the local level.

CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT AND CHILD CARE

Child support enforcement is an essential part of welfare reform efforts, The child support program locates non-custodial parents, establishes paternity, establishes and enforces support orders, and collects child support payments from those who are legally obligated to pay. Payment of child support can help a family to leave welfare or combined with other income, reduce the need for single parent families and their children to rely on welfare in the first place.

Welfare reform enables tribes to operate their own child support enforcement prorams for the first time. PRWORA authorizes direct funding of tribal child support programs, and with respect to tribes that do not seek this opportunity, includes improvements to facilitate tribal-State agreements that provide for cooperative delivery of child support services in Indian country. This added flexibility provides significant opportunities for tribes and for Indian children and families: tribal governments can choose to plan and implement child support programs that meet the unique needs of tribal communities and improve the delivery of child support services in Indian country.

As I will discuss later in my testimony, we are reviewing the results of an extensive consultation process which will lead to regulations that implement direct tribal child support funding. In the meanwhile, although tribes are not yet operating programs under the broad direct funding approach the law now allows, we are seeing some promising results from early State-tribal cooperative agreements and tribal demonstration grants.

Cooperative Agreements. Tribes such as the Navajo Nation and the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe are entering cooperative agreements with their States, enabling them to carry out tribal child support enforcement and receive funding and other support through the States' programs. As a result of their cooperative agreements with the State of New Mexico and Arizona, the Navajo Nation has seen a big shift in child support collections. The Navajo Nation began child support enforcement in New Mexico in 1994. Before then, there had been almost no child support collection on the Navajo Reservation in New Mexico. In 1998, there was $500,000 in child support collections under the tribe's child support program in New Mexico.

Tribal Demonstrations. Some tribes are designing child support programs with the support of our planning and demonstration grants—"Section 1115" grants, Special Improvement Project grants, and tribal planning grants. Currently, the Chickasaw Nation, Colville Confederated Tribes, Puyallup Tribe, Lac du Flambeau Band of Chippewa, Central Council of the Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes, and the State of Wisconsin and Menominee Tribe receive this discretionary grant funding. We are learning from these projects, sharing information, and identifying issues and technical assistance needs, to help ensure that tribes are able to operate successful child support programs. Other tribes will benefit from the knowledge gained from these special grant programs.

The third programmatic area I will focus on today is child care. Child care is extremely important to the well-being of our Nation's children and to their parents' ability to work and maintain employment. and thus a vital supportive service to welfare reform efforts. The Clinton administration is dedicated to providing support and resources to ensure healthy, safe, affordable child care settings that are so desperately needed to help parents work and help children develop to their-full potential and become ready for school.

The Child Care and Development Block Grant [CCDBG] as amended by PRWORA, assists low-income families and those transitioning off welfare to obtain child care so they can work or attend training/education. PRWORA amended the CCDBG to bring together, for the first time, four Federal child care subsidy programs thereby allowing states and tribes to design a comprehensive, integrated service delivery system to meet the needs of low-income families.

With regard to tribes, the law requires a one to 2 percent tribal set-aside of the acregate funding and allows tribes or tribal organizations to use program funds for construction or renovation purposes as long as it will not result in a decrease in the level of child care services.

The Secretary has allocated 2 percent of CCDBG funds for tribes, doubling the amount of child care funds made available to the tribes since fiscal year 1996. In fiscal year 1999 tribes 10 received $63 million, compared to the $28 million received in fiscal year 1996. In fiscal year 1999, 254 tribal grantees, representing approximately 500 federally recognized Indian Tribes and Alaska Native Villages, were awarded child care grants.

Tribes receive CCDBG funding either directly or through consortia arrangements. According, to preliminary 1997 data, 18,755 children were served by tribal child-care grantees. The majority of these children have working parents [77 percent] or a parent(s) in training or educational programs [19 percent]. The remaining 4 percent were in protective services. Their income levels vary with 63 percent at or below the poverty level, 26 percent above poverty but below 150 percent of poverty, 8 percent above 150 percent, and 3 percent above 200 percent of the poverty level.

I would point out that our efforts to increase the supply and availability of child care are ongoing. The President has unveiled a comprehensive package of child care proposals that includes significant increases in child care funding to help working families. Beyond the tax credits and school-age child care funding in the Departments of Treasury and Education, $10.5 billion in additional funding, over 5 years, is targeted for HHS child care programs:

A 5-year $7.5 billion increase in the subsidy funding for child care which, when combined with funds from welfare reform, will increase the number of children receiving child care assistance by more than I million to a total of 21.4 million. The tribal set-aside provided under law will ensure that this increase in funding serves to benefit State and tribal child care programs alike.

An Early Learning Fund proposed at $3 billion over 5 years which will, for the first time, specifically devote funding to communities to enhance the quality and availability of care, with a focus on promoting school readiness for children through acre five.

I'd like to now turn to ACF's outreach, consultation, and technical assistance efforts to work with tribes on these historic legislative changes

Outreach, Consultation, and Technical Assistance

In increasing, the flexibility available to States and tribes to design their own welfare In reform programs, PWRORA changed the Federal role from one of policy approval to one that focuses on hands-on support through outreach, technical assistance, and the dissemination of promising, practices, as well as accountability, research, and evaluation. In this concluding section, I would like to highlight what we have learned and accomplished so far through consultation, outreach, and technical assistance with our tribal partners and offer a few notes about the next steps that lie ahead.

Our goals, in keeping with this new role and with the government-to-government relationship that is central to our work with tribes, are to consult broadly and to provide information that can assist tribes in making the wide range of choices that they face about the most effective ways to assist tribal members in becoming self-sufficient. To help inform these decisions, we have been working with our tribal partners to provide information about the statute, about policy choices, and about promising practices and service delivery strategies. We have also worked to bring people together so that they can share their own expertise, talk about problems and potential solutions, and then develop strategies.

Outreach and Consultation.

In the development of the Tribal TANF Notice of Proposed Rulemaking [NPRM], which was published on July 22, 1998, we sought to undertake a broad consultation strategy prior to drafting the proposed rules. To better inform our policymaking efforts, we held I dozens of conferences, consultations and meetings with representatives of tribal, State and local governments, as well as soliciting input through a letter. An extended comment period [through November 20, 1998] was provided on the proposed rule at the request of commenters and as a result a considerable number of comments were received from tribes as well as the National Congress of American Indians. We expect to publish the final rule this fall.

We continue to look for ways to strengthen and improve our consultation process. As we work on development of regulations implementing the tribal child support program, we further intensified our outreach efforts. Six consultations were held in 1998 to obtain tribal input in developing the regulations in Alaska, Oregon, New Mexico, Minnesota, Tennessee, and Washington, DC. Each consultation included an overview of the national CSE program, followed by tribal input on the tribal program and regulations. In addition, we established a toll-free "800" number for comments and questions, and we continue to consult with a resource group of interested and knowledgeable tribal representatives. The input we have received is extremely valuable in helping to inform our rulemaking efforts currently underway. We anticipate publication of the regulations later this year.

We are committed to continuing and improving our consultation with tribes as welfare reform evolves. In addition to our work within ACF, we are coordinating with the broader tribal consultation strategy conducted by HHS, which has included listening sessions nationwide as well as the scheduled appointment of a staff specialist in the Office of the Secretary who will focus exclusively on tribal affairs.

Technical Assistance and Information Dissemination.

In addition, we have been involved in providing technical assistance on a number of fronts:

With respect to TANF, we have sponsored along with DOL five Promising Practices National Conferences and there was tribal representation at each. In addition to our programs, these conferences included session on Welfare-to-Work and substance abuse issues. At the Phoenix conference, a representative from the Center for American Indian Studies presented on the plenary panel as well as a workshop, where tribal issues were discussed.

To build on this work, later in April, we are planning a 2-day workshop in Denver to bring together Region VIII States, Tribes and Tribal Community Colleges. This workshop is being designed to share information and best practices, strengthen the Tribes' role in welfare reform, improve State/Tribal working relationships and increase collaboration/networking, between and among States, Tribes, and Tribal Community Colleges.

The administration for Native Americans within ACF has provided resources to support technical assistance, as well. For example, ANA provided $1.2 million for five grants to support efforts to develop and disseminate information on TANF, including, convening workshops and meetings with tribes to inform them about TANF and to give tribes opportunities to share information and expertise about supporting tribal families. Additional collaborative work among ACF programs is planned for the future including comprehensive strategic planning conferences addressing social services and economic development.

The Office of Child Support Enforcement issued briefing packages on the program and legislative changes to tribes to ensure they tribes could be fully engaged in consultation meetings. The office also published and sent to all federally recognized tribes a publication, "Strengthening the Circle: Child Support for Native American Children." This publication describes the new opportunities for tribal CSE programs and intergovernmental partnerships to meet the needs of tribal children and families.

In phase II of its contract with the Native American Management Services, Inc., OCSE and NAMS are designing technical assistance plans for tribal child support demonstration grantees. At an initial meeting with grantees held recently, tribal participants identified problems and areas of need both specific to their tribes as well as problems and areas of need shared by tribes in general. This information will be used to develop technical assistance materials for tribes under cooperative agreements with States and for tribes planning on administering their own child support programs.

With respect to child care, in January 1998, we awarded a 3-year contract to establish and operate a Tribal Child Care Technical Assistance Center [TriTAC]. TriTAC assists tribal grantees in child care capacity building efforts through the following major activities:a tribal child care home page; a toll-free information and referral line, a software package to assist with program reporting, a newsletter, and annual tribal conference. A data base of effective program strategies is also being developed.

In conjunction with TriTAC, we are currently making plans to hold several training sessions across the country for tribal child care grantees. The purpose of this special training is to focus on one or two topic areas that have been identified by tribal grantees, but not covered in depth at the National American Indian/Alaska Native Child Care Conference, or at ACF regional meetings.

Again, we look forward to building on these technical assistance strategies, and we will seek to be responsive as welfare reform evolves and the needs of tribes change over time.

CONCLUSION

Our goal in welfare reform is enabling, families to move to work and to succeed at work over the long haul. To accomplish this goal, we are eager to continue working with our tribal and State partners to support their design of TANF, child care, and child support programs that will make the most difference to families. We look forward to building on the extraordinary creativity and commitment that tribal leaders have already demonstrated and on the positive first steps that we have already taken together to share information, to consult, and to provide technical assistance and support in the spirit of the government-to-government relationship with tribes. We know that in addition to working internally to coordinate our efforts with the tribes, we also must work with our other Federal partners and the Congress to address the serious economic and social problems faced by tribes. On this front, the Department of Labor's Welfare-to-Work program is a key partner with our efforts. We are committed to building on these early steps and working together to see increasing numbers of tribal members improve their lives and I become self-sufficient.

Thank you Mr. Chairman, this concludes my prepared statement. I would be pleased to respond to any questions you or members of the committee may have.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ANDREW GREY, TRIBAL CHAIRMAN, SISSETON-WAHPETON SIOUX TRIBE

Good Morning Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee. My name is Andrew Grey; I am Chairman of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe of the Lake Traverse Reservation. It is a pleasure to be here to testify about the tribe's involvement with Public Law 102–477, the Indian Employment, Training and Related Services Demonstration Act of 1992 and Welfare Reform.

The Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe has been a "477" grantee since 1994 and have found 477 approach to be excellent way of delivering employment and training services on the Lake Traverse Reservation. On behalf of the tribe, I would like to thank this committee and Congress for enacting the "477" law which allows tribes to consolidate employment, training and related services programs into one comprehensive program.

The tribe has an enrollment of 10,227 members with approximately 45 percent of them living on or near the reservation. According to the most recent Bureau of Indian Affairs data, the unemployment rate on the reservation is approximately 50 percent. The poverty rate among Indian people is over 60 percent according to 1990 Census data. The reservation is very rural and contains several communities the largest being the city of Sisseton, which has a population of 2,200. Lack of jobs, basic education, skill training, childcare facilities, transportation, and substance abuses are the major barriers to employment for many tribal members.

In March 1994 the tribe started its 477-demonstration project. In October 1997 the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families Program [TANF] was integrated into 477. In March of this year the tribe embarked on another historic course by entering into a Cooperative Agreement with the State of South Dakota for child support enforcement services on the Lake Traverse Reservation. Hopefully, this agreement will help defray some of the expenses associated with administering a welfare program.

Currently the tribe has integrated the following programs into 477:

B.I.A.: Adult Vocational Training; Direct Employment Assistance; General Assistance; and Tribal Work Experience Program.

D.O.L.: Job Training Partnership Act Title IV–A; Job Training Partnership Act Title II–B; and Summer Youth Welfare to Work.

H.H.S.: Native Employment Works Program; Child Care Development Fund; and Temporary Assistance for Needy Families.

It should be noted that the tribe does not receive State matching funds for TANF. The 477 approach to delivering employment and training services was one the main reasons behind the Tribal Council decision to administer its own welfare program. 477 provides the needed resources to support welfare recipients so they are able engage in TANF work activities.

The primary beneficiary of the tribe's implementation of 477 has been and continues to be clients who are in need of employment/training services. Because TANF and General Assistance have been integrated into 477, these welfare recipients automatically become clients of the program. Integration has greatly reduced the tribe's administrative burden thus staff have more time to improve the effectiveness of services, identity client needs, and develop services to address those needs. Welfare recipients, hard to serve clients with multiple barriers to employment, have benefited most from the additional staff time.

Additionally, the 477 program has and continues to be a major player in support of tribal economic development. In 1995 the tribe decided to relocate and restructure a stagnant tribal enterprise into a more diversified vibrant enterprise. The 477 program was used to give prior training and work experience for an expanded workforce; 22 of 29 participants entered employment as result of this 477 initiative to support tribal economic development. In 1997, the tribe opened a new gaming establishment, which created over 300 jobs for tribal members. The 477 program was able to assist 106 individual with supportive services, which enabled them to obtain and retain employment. The end result of this effort was a 22-percent reduction in the AFDC caseload.

In October 1998, the tribe began expanding its gaming enterprise-the addition of an 80-room hotel. This expansion will create 40 new jobs for tribal members. In December 1998, the 477 in collaboration with the Sisseton-Wahpeton Community College developed a 120-hour intensive Job Readiness Training course specifically tailored to welfare recipients and the hotel management. As of April 1, the hotel management has hired 15 TANF recipients, who graduated from this training. Hopefully, this prior training will reduce startup costs and help assure the success of this enterprise.

The above examples of support for economic development would not have happened if the tribe did not have a 477 program. The flexibility and resources of an integrated program made it possible.

Program data show that on an average month four welfare recipients are placed into unsubsidized employment. However, this success has not reduced the tribe's welfare caseload. The caseload has remained relatively constant. This can be attributed to the following reasons:

No. 1, there has been a constant influx of new cases. The majority of the new cases are young mothers. Young people comprise the highest percentage of the resident tribal population.

No. 2, the program has a 45-percent reoccurrence rate among welfare cases. Cases reopen because a loss of employment [problems with childcare and transportation] and ongoing domestic problems.

No. 3, lack of support from the non-custodial parent.

The tribe will continue to commit the majority of its limited resources for economic development and job creation activities. We are also currently in the planning stages as to how best to address problems with childcare. Solving childcare problems undoubtedly will require a commitment of tribal resources.

The tribe is need of funds to plan and implement strategies to prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with special emphasis on reducing teenage pregnancies.

Additionally, the tribe needs funds to plan and provide services to non-custodial parents. The Tiospa Zina Tribal School experiences a high school graduating that is 50 percent in size of the ninth grade class 4 years prior. The graduating class is routinely 70 percent female. Students who dropout are primarily male. Therefore, employability among young adult males on the reservation is extremely low. They are in need of a set of comprehensive employment/training services. Currently, the 477 program does not have the resources to address all the employment and training needs of custodial parents as well as the needs of those who are unemployed, underemployed or economically disadvantaged.

Also, the tribe needs funds to plan and implement transportation services so Indian people who obtain employment will be able to retain their job.

On behalf of the Tribal Council, I would like to make the following recommendations to improve the 477 initiative and better equip tribes to deal with the impact of welfare reform.

No. 1, that Congress reauthorize the Welfare to Work program through 2002 with an increase in the tribal set-aside. Funding for tribal programs should be set at not less than 3 percent of the funds available.

No. 2, if Welfare to Work Legislation is reauthorized and if a State does not apply for formula funding, the new legislation should provide the tribe the right to receive a proportionate share.

No. 3, that B.I.A. and the other Federal agencies provide financial support for the technical assistance efforts of the 477 Tribal Work Group. Welfare reform may force additional tribes to develop a 477 program and include TANF in the integrated program.

No. 4, that B.I.A. insure adequate staff resources to properly support the 477 initiative.

No. 5, that Congress amend the Personal Responsibility Act to allow HHS to modify the TANF reporting requirements. Current reporting requirements place a heavy administrative burden upon tribes. The TANF reporting requirements should be based upon tribal circumstances instead of State requirements.

In conclusion I would like to state that the tribe is very concerned about what will happen between now and the year 2002. Tribal welfare caseloads have not experienced a reduction. It should also be noted that the provision which disregards months welfare assistance received by an adult living on an Indian Reservation with a 50-percent unemployment rate does not apply on the Lake Traverse Reservation. The tribe sincerely believes that it bests knows the needs of its people and can best determine how to address those needs and it has made a very concerted effort, with limited resources to reduce the impact of welfare reform on our reservation. Any reduction of funding will severely hamper the tribe's efforts and will have a very negative impact on the poor quality of life now being experienced by many of our tribal members.

This concludes my prepared statement. I would be please to respond to any questions the committee may have.

Thank you again for the opportunity to testify.

QUESTIONS WITH RESPONSES

Question 1: Can you tell us of your experience with the Department of Health and Human Services [HHS] in using "477" program to administer TANF and other HHS programs?

Response: Our experience with HHS has been very positive. HHS has been very supportive of the "477" program. The only area in which HHS has been lacking is in providing funds for training and technical assistance. Funding for training and technical assistance will enable the Tribal Work Group to assist other Tribes to benefit from "477" as well as help current "477" Tribes improve their programs.

Question 2: Does the training reduce the startup costs to the businesses and help ensure the business will make a profit?

Response: "477" Job Readiness Training, short-term work experience and supportive services have played a significant role in reducing startup costs. It should be noted that the tribe did not train all the people for the 360 new jobs. The "477" program did not have the resources to train that many people. Training was provided to approximately 80 people and 100 additional people received supportive services, which helped them to obtain and retain employment. It should also be noted that the businesses were businesses that the tribe started and have become profitmaking enterprises. The profits are minimal however the jobs created have given people an opportunity to get off TANF and work toward attaining self sufficiency.

Question 3: Is the situation with youth, problems with teen pregnancy and dropping out of school, being turned around with more job opportunities in the last 4 years?

Response: Only in 1998 did the number of teenage pregnancies drop significantly. Whether this can be attributed to increased job opportunities cannot be ascertained at the present time. The level of school dropouts remains the same. The Tribe is in need of funds to determine causes and implement solutions to these problems.

Question 4: Do you support the large scale widening of "477" for purposes of services delivery to welfare recipients?

Response: Because we are one of the smaller tribes, we have found the "477" Program an excellent method of delivering services to welfare recipients. It should be the Tribes option to decide what programs to place in a "477" integrated program. The larger the list of eligible programs, the greater the opportunity for the tribe to be innovative in accomplishing welfare reform on the reservation.

Question 5: Are you supportive of what the National Congress of American Indians [NCAI] has developed in terms of amendments to the Welfare Reform Act?

Response: I have read the proposed amendments developed by NCAI and have shared them with the "477" Program Manager and we do support the proposed amendments.

Thank you for allowing the tribe to submit additional information for the record.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KEVIN GOVER, ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR INDIAN AFFAIRS, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, WASHINGTON, DC

I appreciate the opportunity to provide a statement for the record on the status of the implementation of welfare reform in Indian country.

Background

In 1996, the President signed the bipartisan Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act [Public Law 104–193] [act], dramatically changing the Nation's welfare system into one that requires work in exchange for time-limited assistance. The act replaced the Federal entitlement to Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] with Temporary Assistance for Needy Families [TANF]. The act also made significant changes in the child care, child support enforcement, and food stamp programs. Public Law 104–193 provides considerable flexibility to States and to tribes to design welfare programs that meet the particular needs of families moving to work and self-sufficiency. TANF provides fixed block grant funding, with most of the funds distributed based upon historic expenditure levels. Tribal governments who choose to operate their own tribal TANF programs receive direct Federal funding, define who will be eligible, and determine what benefits and services families will receive. Alternatively, they may choose to have states continue to serve tribal families.

Current Status

The Temporary Assistance for Needy Families [TANF] administered by HHS is the most visible and basic program for providing financial support and employment services to help Indian families find and succeed in employment. Under welfare reform, tribal governments are eligible to operate their own tribal TANF programs and 19 tribes are currently operating their own programs. Additional tribes are in the process of deliberating whether to opt for a tribal TANF program.

The limited data available from States indicate that, to date, welfare caseloads have not declined in Indian country at the same rate experienced by others elsewhere and that therefore, Indians comprise an increasing share of the total caseload in a number of States. Welfare reform policy has been designed to train, support, refer, and equip recipients with the necessary skills to find employment in jobs which for the most part already exist. TANF funds may be used to provide subsidies for the creation of jobs for needy recipients and family members, but by themselves are not sufficient to reduce the high levels of unemployment on Indian reservations.

The Welfare-to-Work program administered by the Department of Labor [DOL] also has significant potential for enhancing employment opportunities for Indians on reservations. The Welfare-to-Work program has provided $30 million [$15 million in each of the fiscal years 1998 and 1999] for grants to Indian tribes. These grants help address the economic development needs of Indian communities by creating job opportunities for long-term, hard-to-employ welfare recipients and non-custodial parents of children on welfare through public or private sector employment. Welfare-to-Work funds may be used for job creation, micro enterprises, and other employment-related activities tailored to meet the particular needs of Indian reservations.

The administration has proposed a reauthorization of the Welfare-to-Work program for fiscal year 2000 that includes several provisions to strengthen the program for Indians. The proposal includes a tripling of the share of the resources under the program that would be allotted to Indian tribes. In addition, the proposal would promote funding to Indian tribes under Welfare-to-Work competitive grants by allowing Indian tribes to apply for such grants directly to the Secretary of Labor. Currently, only Indian organizations, rather than tribes, may apply and may only do so in conjunction with a private industry council and after going through a consultation process with the Governor. The proposal would also eliminate current provisions that require the recapture and use of unobligated Indian grant funds for other Welfare-to-Work program purposes and allow those funds to be retained for an additional year to assist Indian communities. The enactment of this proposal to reauthorize the Welfare-to-Work program would therefore provide Indian tribes with important resources to create meaningful jobs for Indian people.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs's Role

The Bureau of Indian Affairs [BIA] social services regulations are currently being revised and general assistance will remain as a safety net program for Indians living on reservations who are unable to qualify for other public assistance programs. Tribes will have flexibility to redesign their BIA general assistance programs to meet unique needs at the reservation level and to adapt welfare reform measures independent of TANF. However, no new additional general assistance funds are provided for redesigns as tribes must meet their program needs within existing general assistance budgeted amounts by the end of their respective fiscal years. Consultation on the BIA's regulations will occur at two separate locations, one in Albuquerque, NM and another in St. Paul, MN. These consultation sessions are expected to solicit significant tribal input which will be used to refine and improve the regulations.

Conclusion

While welfare caseloads are down and more people are moving off welfare rolls to jobs across the Nation, data from some States indicates that these trends have not yet been seen in Indian country where significant challenges remain. The BIA, tribes, tribal organizations, and other Federal agencies need to work together on initiatives to improve cooperation and to allow tribes more flexibility and incentives to operate their own public assistance, child support enforcement, and other welfare related programs. We need to work to encourage private economic development, by means including but not limited to the TANF and Welfare-to-Work programs'job creation activities, in order to increase the number of jobs in Indian country and to expand local tribal economies and thereby to enable Indian people to realize the benefits of welfare reform.

Thank you for the opportunity to present the BIA position on the issue of Welfare Reform Implementation as it pertains to Indian country.

Testimony of W. Ron Allen, President

National Congress of American Indians

Before the United States Senate Committee on Indian Affairs

Regarding the Implementation of Welfare Revisions in Indian Country

Good morning Chairman Campbell, Vice Chairman Inouye and distinguished members of the Indian Affairs Committee. I am W. Ron Allen, President of the National Congress of American Indians (NCAI), the oldest and largest Indian advocacy organization in the United States devoted to promoting and protecting the rights of Tribal governments and their citizens. I also serve as Chairman of the Jamestown S'Klallam Tribe. I very much appreciate the opportunity to comment on the impacts of the implementation of welfare revisions in Indian Country. Further, NCAI's testimony contains several proposed changes to the welfare reform law that we ask this Committee to support so that tribes might fully participate in welfare reform and that our citizens have every opportunity to become productive and engaged community members.

I. Overview

In the Summer of 1996, the 104th Congress passed, and the President signed into law, the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (Pub. L. 104-193), more commonly referred to as Welfare Reform. The following year, the 105th Congress technically amended portions of the welfare reform law and established a Welfare-to-Work (WtW) program, as part of the spending provisions of the historic Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (Pub. L. 105-33). The result of these laws is an unprecedented and comprehensive change in the way federal welfare assistance is provided to individuals, children and families living in poverty throughout the United States.

These new laws exact broad-sweeping changes in federal entitlements such as: Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), now a discretionary block grant to states known as Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) which mandates work participation requirements; Food Stamp eligibility; Medicaid and Medicare program delivery; child care and other children's support programs; and a host of other welfare related assistance programs and services. Devolution of most of these programs to states and often, in turn, to local governments has alleviated the federal government of most of its fiscal and jurisdictional program responsibilities. Federal funding for most of these programs is now discretionary in nature as well, with spending authority block-granted directly to the states.

II. Welfare Reform and Indian Country

The impacts of welfare reform on this nations' poor are monumental. However, in Indian Country, where tribal communities historically suffer the highest levels of poverty and unemployment in the nation, those impacts are proving to be devastating. Few provisions in the law protect, or even address, the unique status and needs of Indian Country. The treatment afforded to tribal governments under the new law, as compared to that of the states, is extremely disproportionate. And yet, to date, Congress, as well as the Administration, have been compelled to do little, if anything, to help tribes achieve the appropriate economic and community development standards necessary to counter the impacts of these laws and policies on tribal communities.

Many within the Congress and the Administration are quick to assert opportunities afforded to tribal governments under the welfare reform law, such as, the ability to operate their own tribal TANF plan independent of state and local government intervention. However, the unfortunate reality is that the resources necessary to develop the physical, administrative and programmatic infrastructures needed for successful TANF implementation are not available to most tribal governments. For example, under AFDC, states were required to provide matching funds toward their programs equal to a percentage of the federal assistance dollars they received. This requirement, coupled with more than sixty years of federal subsidies and technical assistance provided to states in developing AFDC program systems, created an excellent foundation for the success of state TANF plans. However, in absence of such federal support for tribal program development similar to what the states have been provided, tribes are at an extreme disadvantage in implementing their own TANF programs.

Under the law, tribes can administer their own welfare assistance programs through the implementation of a U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) approved tribal TANF plan. However, states are not required to provide the much-needed state matching funds to those approved tribal TANF plans. This lack of basic support makes it virtually impossible for most tribes to assume welfare assistance program responsibilities without state matching funds. Moreover, the welfare reform law only guarantees tribes the federal dollars expended on those identifiable tribal populations served under the Fiscal Year (FY) 1994 AFDC program. The reality of operating a tribal TANF plan is this: tribes are offered an opportunity to assume highly expensive welfare program responsibilities; to serve a welfare population that is usually larger than the population identified under the state's FY1994 AFDC recipient data; with roughly half of the funding that the states needed to operate those same programs; including little or no technical support from either the states or the federal government. Unless a tribe already has the economic resources necessary to devote to such a program, it makes little fiscal sense for that tribe to assume such costly responsibilities under current statutory and regulatory impediments.

Welfare reform subjects TANF recipients to strict work participation requirements in an effort to force habitual welfare recipients into the workforce. However, compliance with these requirements have caused problems for many tribes. Under federal guidelines, an individual's TANF payments will be provided for a period of not more than two consecutive years, with cumulative lifetime payments capped at a five-year maximum. States can impose even stricter requirements if they choose. There is a tribal provision in the law (PRWORA, § 408) which allows an Indian adult to deduct from their five-year cumulative limit any time living on an Indian reservation as an unemployed person, so long as that reservation community has a reporting period unemployment rate of at least 50 percent. For tribes that can document a 50 percent unemployment rate throughout the entire reporting period, this is a well-suited provision. Most tribes, however, cannot meet this requirement, showing instead a fluctuating unemployment rate hovering just below 50 percent, due mainly to seasonal or temporary employment on their reservations.

To a single Indian mother with children living on a reservation with a 38 percent or 45 percent unemployment rate, instead of a 50 percent unemployment rate, the difference in the quality of life for her family at any of those slightly varying unemployment levels is negligible. The bottom line is that single mothers with children in their care continue to make up the majority of the unemployed populations on Indian reservations. Without adequate jobs, education, vocational training and family support services, it is impossible for impoverished single mothers to seek and secure employment opportunities, on or off the reservation, without literally abandoning their children.

Welfare reform's current implementation in Indian Country fails to address the underlying cause of unemployment on Indian reservations – a lack of jobs. Creating better tribal economic development opportunities, which in turn lead to sustainable economies and the creation of jobs for unemployed Indian parents is the real issue that Congress and the Administration must address more vigorously. Indian parents want the same opportunities as non-Indian parents, including secure employment, freedom from poverty and an improved quality of life for their families. Mr. Chairman, NCAI applauds your commitment to improving the economic conditions in tribal communities as a primary solution to eliminating poverty throughout Indian Country. Moreover, NCAI urges this Committee to support the tribal recommendations discussed below which amend the welfare reform law as an initial step in ensuring that economic opportunities in Indian Country serve to improve the lives of our most impoverished Indian families.

III. Indian Country's Response to Welfare Reform

Tribal leaders have responded to the enactment of welfare reform with great concern. Throughout several NCAI national gatherings on welfare reform, tribes have accurately depicted the enormous impacts welfare reform is having on their communities, provided substantial anecdotal information on these impacts as well as noted changes in the law that must occur in order to reverse such impacts. Tribal leaders have mandated NCAI to make a top priority of monitoring national legislative and policy developments surrounding welfare reform, as well as be prepared to implant tribal concepts and positions on welfare issues whenever such opportunities arise.

NCAI realizes that the collecting and sharing of information is vital to a better understanding of the true social service needs in Indian Country. NCAI also discovered early on a significant lack of statistical information, both demographic and recipient-related, that identifies the specific social service needs of Native American families. Therefore, in NCAI's effort to address these and other welfare reform issues, we hosted several national tribal welfare reform meetings and forums throughout the United States, including: Phoenix, AZ; Seattle, WA; Washington, D.C.; Portland, OR; Green Bay, WI; and, Myrtle Beach, SC. At each of these events, federal and state agency officials joined with tribal leaders and tribal representatives in formidable discourses over welfare reform's impacts on Indian Country. Throughout these forums many options were identified that the tribes, the states and the federal government should take under consideration to help ensure that tribes are fully included in welfare reform implementation processes. Transcripts and documents associated with these forums have been recorded, developed and made available to the general public as part of NCAI's role as a national information clearinghouse on tribal welfare reform issues. These documents may be reviewed and downloaded from the NCAI web site at: http://www.ncai.org.

Using this information, NCAI facilitated the development of a series of proposed Indian amendments to the Welfare Reform Act, which were completed and submitted to Congress in February 1997. While some of the proposed changes were included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, several have yet to be acted upon. It is our contention that these proposals, if enacted, would help facilitate a positive opportunity for tribes to more fully and more meaningfully participate in welfare reform. The following is a brief explanation of each provision included in the initial amendments package, along with highlights of any action taken, either congressionally or administratively. A full text version of the amendments package has been provided as an attachment to this document.

1) Supplemental Funds for Tribal TANF Programs - provides tribes operating TANF plans funding levels equal to those the tribal welfare population received under AFDC.

2) Availability of TANF Loans to Indian Tribes - clarifies current law making Indian tribes with tribal TANF programs eligible for federal welfare program loans. This amendment was included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (Pub. L. 105-33).

3) Tribal Development Fund - establishes a "Tribal Development Fund" providing equal access for tribes to contingency funds, program bonus awards and technical assistance funding, currently available only to states.

4) Disregard of the 60 Month Time Limit on Tribal TANF Benefits - allows time spent by an Indian family, living on a reservation, to be disregarded from the 60-month time limit on TANF benefit eligibility; redefines "Indian Reservation" to include Indian communities in states such as Alaska and Oklahoma; eliminates the "one thousand (1000) person" population requirement of a reservation in order for families enrolled in smaller tribes to qualify for the time limit disregard; and calls for the use of the "best available data" in determining population and unemployment levels a reservation must experience to qualify as a time limit disregard community. This amendment was included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (Pub. L. 105-33).

5) Tribal Determination of BIA/GA Program Payment Levels - provides tribes with more control and flexibility over the spending levels and spending authority of the BIA's General Assistance (BIA/GA) program to help relieve the impacts of welfare reform on their communities. The BIA is currently revising their tribal General Assistance regulations, however, tribes have yet to be assured that such revisions will reflect this change.

6) Cooperative Agreements with States over Child Support Enforcement Functions - allows tribes an option to enter into cooperative agreements with the states to use state procedures and guidelines to supplement a tribal court system in operating tribal child support enforcement programs. This amendment was included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (Pub. L. 105-33).

7) Direct Funding for Tribal Child Support Enforcement Programs - allows tribes operating Child Support Enforcement (CSE) programs to receive direct funding from the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS). Although this amendment was combined with tribal amendment six and included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (Pub. L. 105-33), the Administration has yet to promulgate regulations and refuses to release such funding until those regulations are in place.

8) Assurance of Equal Consultation with Tribes over State Plans - assures that tribes receive equal consultation surrounding the design of welfare services under state plans.

9) State Option to Exclude Tribal Work Program Participants - allows states to exclude individuals served by a tribal work program from being calculated in a state's work participation rates. This amendment was included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (Pub. L. 105-33).

10) Reporting Requirements for Tribal TANF Programs - allows the data collection and reporting requirements associated with operating a TANF program to be modified on a case-by-case basis to adapt to a tribe's capabilities.

11) Tribal Inclusion in Secretary's National TANF Program Studies - mandates the Secretary to conduct research on tribal TANF programs as well as state TANF programs, including information on potential benefits, effects, and costs of operating different TANF programs.

12) Tribal Retro Cession - allows a tribe to retro cede a tribal TANF grant back to the Secretary, and discontinue operating a tribal TANF program, if preconditions identified in the tribal TANF plan (i.e., infrastructure improvement, technical assistance, job opportunities) do not exist. Language on retro cession of a tribal TANF plan back to state authority and control has been included in the Notice of Proposed Rule Making (NPRM) on tribal TANF/Native Employment Works (NEW) programs set for final promulgation on November 22, 1998.

13) Equitable Assistance to Indians under State TANF Plans - enforce state requirement to provide equitable services to Indian individuals not receiving assistance from a Tribal TANF Program. A few states have complied with the law and provided equitable access to Indian individuals under their state plans. However, this requirement (PRWORA, § 402(A)(5)) carries no enforcement provision under the current law, allowing states to disregard providing equitable assistance to Indian families under state plans.

14) Tribal Appeals - allows Tribal governments operating TANF programs, access to an appeals process over adverse actions by the Secretary similar to the process available to the states.

As noted, a few of these amendments were included as part of the enacted changes to the welfare reform law during the last Congress. However, most of the proposed tribal amendments were not considered, including those that would have effectuated the most significant welfare reform changes in Indian Country. In addition, since the development of the February 1997 amendments' package, tribes have identified further impediments under the law that require legislative attention. The following is a brief description of these additional issues.

I) Ability of Tribes to Retain "Carryover" TANF Funds. This is a major issue for all the TANF tribes and tribes considering TANF. It is unlikely that the DHHS will reverse its position taken in the Proposed Rules (based on its legislative interpretation that Congress did not intend to allow tribes to carry over funds even though states are permitted to do so), absent a legislative fix. Such a fix would not require new funding and could be argued as a matter of oversight in drafting the law.

II) Reauthorization of the Tribal Funding in the Welfare-to-Work Program, Including an Increase in the Amount of Tribal Set-Aside Funding and a Relaxation of the Rules. The Welfare-to-Work (WtW) program was authorized for only two years – FY1998-99. The tribal set-aside is only 1 percent of the total WtW funding. The complexity of the rules and the targeting provisions have made it difficult for tribes to take full advantage of this money, which is the only new source of funding to enable tribes to provide employment services to TANF recipients. The Administration is asking Congress for a one year extension of the Welfare-to-Work program in its FY2000 budget request, with a funding level of $1 billion. Reportedly, the Administration is considering an increase in the tribal set-aside under WtW from 1 percent to 3 percent, thereby increasing the tribal share to $30 million for the upcoming fiscal year. Congress is urged to support this initiative.

III) Distribution of Child Support Collections to Tribal TANF Programs. This is a major issue for many, if not all, of the 19 TANF grantees. With or without some form of state match, such collections are a potentially important source of support for tribal TANF programs. The issue does not involve any new funding, but may require clear statutory authority to insure that tribes receive such collections from absent parents of tribal TANF clients.

IV) Treatment of the Tribal TANF Program as a Pub. L. 93-638 Program for Tribal Contracting Purposes, Including Payment of Contract Support Costs. This issue is currently before the Federal District Court in Phoenix as a result of litigation initiated by the Navajo Nation over the DHHS Secretary's initial decision to refuse tribal 638 contracting of TANF. It should be noted that any legislative action on this issue brings with it the potential of raising broader questions about the scope of 638 contracting. Therefore, we ask that such amendments be narrowly construed to help eliminate the risk of additional changes being offered that may carry unknown consequences.

V) BIA's Revision of 25 C.F.R. Part 20, Financial Assistance and Social Service Programs. The revision of the BIA social service regulations has not been the BIA's most timely or inclusive effort. In fact, as recently as June 1998, the Bureau stated for the record that they would plan to hold a series of consultation sessions with tribes throughout Indian Country. Tribes asked for more, including the establishment of a tribal working group to help facilitate a true negotiated rule making process (neg./reg.) over the revision of these regulations. To date, no appropriate consultation with tribes has occurred over the proposed revisions to Part 20. The BIA did announce, but then postponed, a planned consultation with tribes. To date, no official rescheduling of that consultation session has occurred, and, although promised much more, tribes will probably have to resort to filing written comments on these revisions during a 30 or 60 day public comment period, as part of a standard regulatory promulgation process. To make matters worse, it is reported that the latest draft of the BIA's proposed social service regulations appear to diminish General Assistance (GA) as a safety-net program of last resort. A proposed provision states that if an individual is sanctioned from a state or tribal TANF plan due to a noncompliance, even noncompliance with state work participation requirements due to a lack of available jobs, he or she may be ineligible for GA.

Mr. Chairman, we urge Congress to consider action on these proposed changes to the welfare reform law. It is in the best interest of all parties – tribal, state and federal – that tribes succeed in the welfare reform process. If the proposed changes to the law are enacted, we feel that welfare reform will move closer to becoming the tool Congress intended in alleviating welfare dependency by improving and expanding workforce development initiatives.

IV. The Lack of Tribal Consultation

Most social service experts familiar with Indian Country concur that once Indian families reach their TANF eligibility time limits, or exhaust their TANF benefits completely, they will have no choice but to turn to the tribe for support services, including General Assistance (GA), to meet many of their basic needs. Considering the federal government's continued under-funding of the GA program, which in most cases is the only form of cash assistance available directly from the tribe to its members, concerns over the future of poor and needy families in Indian Country take on a whole new urgency. In efforts to address these concerns, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), in conjunction with the NCAI 1998 Mid-Year Session in Green Bay, WI, held a tribal introductory session on the proposed draft revisions to 25 C.F.R. Part 20 - Financial Assistance and Social Service Programs, which includes the GA regulations. As noted above, the BIA promised tribes at this session that they would plan a series of consultation sessions with tribal governments in the coming months throughout Indian Country.

Per NCAI Resolution EC-99-001 (attached), tribes have concluded that anything short of full consultation with Indian Nations over proposed changes to 25 C.F.R. Part 20, is unacceptable. As a matter of principle, such lack of full and deliberate consultation with tribes violates long accepted government-to-government relations established between the federal trustee and Indian tribes via treaties, statutes and executive orders. Executive Order #13084 further supports this policy by calling on all federal-level departments and their agencies to develop an improved consultation and negotiations process with Indian tribes over the promulgation of federal regulations that effect them.

Indian Country's effort to extend the government-to-government relationship beyond the confines of the BIA and the Indian Health Service (IHS) comes at a critical time when Indian programs and service functions are rapidly expanding within other federal agencies. These newly targeted agencies will undoubtedly look to the BIA as a model to develop their own tribal consultation and negotiation policy. Recognizing this potential role model status makes the BIA's lack of tribal government consultation over the GA revisions extremely troubling.

NCAI has also developed a set of comments on the tribal Temporary Assistance for Needy Families / Native Employment Works (TANF/NEW) Notice of Proposed Rule Making (NPRM). After incorporating comments from tribes, intertribal and national/regional Indian organizations, a task force comprised of tribal welfare reform and social service experts helped identify issues and draft a comprehensive set of comments which NCAI then finalized and submitted to the DHHS. However, the consultation and negotiation process with tribes by the DHHS on promulgating federal regulations to implement the tribal TANF/NEW laws have been minimal, consisting primarily of:

a) a five-page, Tribal TANF Questionnaire sent to all federally recognized Indian tribes on February 11, 1997, which provided tribes an opportunity to propose suggestions to the ACF on a number of issues, including: i) what types of tribal data sources should be used to determine funding levels for tribal TANF grants; ii) the contents of, and process for, approving tribal TANF plans; iii) the penalty assessment process for tribal TANF plan violations; iv) tribal work participation requirements and time limits; v) tribal data reporting requirements; and vi) the level of consultation and negotiation required by the tribes of the ACF;

b) a guidance document for tribes to use in developing their own TANF plans, also sent to tribes on February 18, 1997;

c) a Data Processing Capacities Questionnaire sent to tribes on March 11, 1997, that was disseminated in an effort to identify the current level of electronic communications and data processing capacities of tribes; and,

d) a tribal TANF/NEW NPRM published in the Federal Register on July 22, 1998, with an original comment deadline of sixty days which was extended an additional sixty days by the DHHS at the urgence of tribes and the NCAI.

Mr. Chairman, the serious lack of tribal consultation by the federal government over such enormous social service changes in Indian Country has directly contributed to the significant lack of participation by tribes in welfare reform programs. The lack of tribal participation in these program functions should raise concerns in Congress as to why such a de minimis level of tribal participation exists. To date, less than twenty tribal TANF plans have been approved and implemented. Of these, the majority serve only a single tribe, with two serving a consortia of tribes. All total, less than one-eighth of the 559 federally recognized tribes are seeking to implement welfare reform on their own.

V. STRENGTHENING GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Improvements in the actual implementation of state and local government welfare reform plans in tribal communities must come from negotiations between state, local and tribal governments over state and local government delivery of welfare reform programs and services in tribal communities. Most tribes are reluctant to enter into negotiations with state and local governments over functions that they deem a part of the federal-tribal trust responsibility. Unfortunately, this current era of devolution does not protect or even recognize such federal responsibilities. Until changes in law and policy reaffirm the responsibility of the federal government over sovereign Indian Nations, it is in the best interest of tribes to negotiate agreements with the states over the implementation of welfare reform in American Indian and Alaska Native communities.

To advance tribal programs with treatment, resources and respect equivalent to state-administered programs, it is our goal to provide Congress with tangible evidence as to the needs of tribes. To help meet these challenges, NCAI has secured grant funding from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation to address, among other things, the strengthening of governmental relations between states and tribes. Importantly, NCAI's efforts under the Kellogg grant will lead to further identification and improved awareness of issues, create an objective information base that is relevant and useable by a variety of policy stakeholders, and explore ways to engage states, tribes, and the organizations that serve them both in more formidable public policy decision-making processes.

Along with NCAI, other Indian organizations and academic institutions have committed to help strengthen government relations between tribes, states and the federal government, either through the development of data collection and tracking methodologies, or through grassroots networking on common socio-economic issues that affect both tribal and non-tribal populations. The following is a brief highlight of these initiatives.

- The National Indian Council on Aging, who is pioneering the use of Geographic Information System (GIS) mapping technology as a way of better defining elder population demographics, including statistical data on socio-economic and health-related needs. Such technology has enabled a revolution in data management and analysis, allowing disparate data to be interwoven into a graphic map that illustrates how areas (state, county, zip code, block group, et cetera) differ on the basis of selected indices.

- The Kathryn M. Buder Center for American Indian Studies at Washington University in St. Louis, MO, headed by former Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs, Dr. Eddie Brown, is involved in a five-year study designed to monitor the impacts of welfare reform on low-income families with children living on Indian reservations in Arizona. Findings from this study, based on both primary and secondary data sources, will be extremely helpful in informing the national public policy debate on improving economic opportunities for American Indian parents and providing an adequate standard of living for their children and families facing the most severe impacts of welfare reform in their reservation communities.

- The Rural Institute on Disabilities at the University of Montana is conducting a study on the impacts of welfare reform on disabled populations. This effort focuses on a broad range of welfare reform-related disability concerns including those of American Indians and Alaska Natives, veterans with disabilities, elderly with disabilities, and parents of children with disabilities. Identifying and collecting data on the special needs of disabled persons currently on welfare assistance, especially those surrounding the lack of employment opportunities and social support services for the disabled, will be the primary focus of this study. Once complete, these findings will help to better inform tribes, states and the federal government on the unique needs associated with disabled welfare-dependant populations, along with options to improve employment opportunities and accompanying support services for disabled workers.

Mr. Chairman, efforts such as the ones highlighted above are critical to a better understanding of welfare reform's broad-reaching impacts on Indian Country. Through these efforts, we are beginning to identify common concerns that affect both Indian and non-Indian populations alike. These are the issues that lay the foundation for more productive relations between tribal, state and federal government entities. We urge Congress to support efforts such as these by increasing federal funding sources and improving tribal eligibility requirements for such funding. In this way, Indian Country can expand its efforts of enhancing intergovernmental relations with federal, state and local government entities.

VI. In Conclusion

In large part, tribes perceive welfare reform as a devolution of federal trust responsibilities to states and local governments without appropriate inclusion and empowerment of tribal governments. Much of their concern is caused by the ambiguity toward the treatment of tribes under the welfare reform laws themselves. The federal government no longer controls most of the allocation of cash assistance, including eligibility requirements and actual cash disbursements, to Indians. Moreover, many tribes have trust provisions in their treaties which call for health, education, welfare and social service support to be rendered by the federal government. For these tribes, as well as for all of Indian Country, welfare reform constitutes an encroachment upon the government-to-government relationship which exists between tribal governments and the federal government. Considering the issues surrounding welfare reform and the substantial impacts these laws and policies are having on tribal communities, NCAI has intensified its level of advocacy on behalf of Indian Country.

Devolution is a growing trend in the United States, with more localized government control over historically federal functions gaining broad-based support among the voting public. Tribal governments also advocate for more control over federal programs, services and funding. Welfare reform is the first major test case of this devolutionary trend. Of utmost concern to tribes, however, is the protection, improvement and expansion of the government-to-government relations between tribes, states and the federal government under devolution. Federal and state governments on the other hand, persist in their lack of acknowledgment of and respect for the sovereignty of tribal governments. Tribal, state and federal commitments to enhance and strengthen government-to-government relationships must be obtained and upheld if improving the quality of life for impoverished Indian families is to occur.

Mr. Chairman, as we have highlighted today, NCAI's proposed changes to the Welfare Reform Act will help to alleviate some of the concerns identified by tribes under welfare reform. It is the goal of NCAI to see a comprehensive set of tribal amendments to welfare reform introduced in Congress, whether under a single instrument, or categorically separated into more "issue focused" packages. If the foreseen congressional agenda requires the separation of issues as a more appropriate tactic for advancing our tribal welfare reform concerns, NCAI would support such initiatives. In this way, tribally specific positions on a variety of welfare related categories (i.e., TANF, job creation, job training/adult-vocational education, Medicaid, data collection, child care, transportation and housing, et cetera) will be available for possible inclusion in a number of potential legislative initiatives before the 106th Congress. It is the collective wisdom of tribal leaders and the NCAI that under the current political climate, this approach may prove more successful than trying to get a comprehensive set of amendments adopted as part of a single bill.

NCAI appreciates the Committee's interest in the impacts that many tribes are currently faced with under welfare reform. We urge this Committee to continue working with NCAI, and others, in the introduction of an amendments package this session. Even if only technical in nature, such legislation will go along way in overcoming some of the impediments identified by tribes under the current law in implementing adequate social service delivery programs in their communities.

As the process of implementing and possibly amending welfare reform continues through the Administration and the Congress, NCAI will continue to serve as a lead advocate on eliminating the Welfare Reform Act's disparities toward Indian Country. Mr. Chairman, NCAI looks forward to working with the Senate Indian Affairs Committee to develop such amendments to the welfare reform statutes as a way to ensure the protection and support of tribal sovereign rights aligned with the provision of social service deliveries, including welfare assistance, to its members. Through the directive of tribal leaders, NCAI stands ready to work with all interested parties to ensure that these goals are achieved.

Indian Amendments Package to Pub. L. 104-193
"Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996"

This 18 page amendments package is provided as an initial response by tribal leaders to amend the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996. Some of these amendments were made part of the DHHS Secretary's technical amendments package that was enacted as part of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. Questions or clarification of any of the following materials should be addressed to NCAI at (202) 466-7767.

AMENDMENT #1 - Supplemental Funds for Tribal TANF Programs - Providing to tribes the total funding used by the states to provide services to Indian families who will now be served by a tribal program, not just the federal share Proposed Amendment: Below are two options for federal contribution of what would be the state share for tribal TANF programs.

(Two) OPTIONS TO PROVIDE SUPPLEMENTAL FUNDS TO TRIBAL TANF PROGRAMS TO REPLACE THE LOSS OF STATE FUNDS

Option 1 - Secretary to pay tribes with approved TANF plans both the federal share, and what would have been the state share, of TANF funds (an entitlement).

Title I of P.L. 104-193, Section 412 (a) (1) (B) is amended to read:

"(a) GRANTS FOR INDIAN TRIBES.-

(1) TRIBAL ASSISTANCE GRANT.-

(A) IN GENERAL.- For each of fiscal years 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, and 2002, the Secretary shall pay to each Indian tribe that has an approved tribal family assistance plan a tribal family assistance grant for the fiscal year in an amount equal to the amount determined under subparagraph (B), and shall reduce the grant payable to any state in which lies the service area or areas of the Indian tribe by that portion of the amount so determined that is attributable to federal expenditures by the state.

(B) AMOUNT DETERMINED.-

(I) IN GENERAL.- The amount determined under this subparagraph is an amount equal to the total amount of the Federal payments to a state or states under Section 403 ~~(as in effect during such fiscal year) for fiscal year 1994 attributable to expenditures~~ (other than child care expenditures) and the amount of state expenditures (other than child care) as required in Section 409 (B) ~~by the State or States under parts A and F (as so in effect) for fiscal year 1994~~ for Indian families residing in the service area or areas identified by the Indian tribe pursuant to Subsection (b) (1) (C) of this Section."

Explanation: Nationally, Indian tribes have unemployment and poverty rates far in excess of the national average. Under P.L. 104-193, a tribe which opts to administer a TANF program is not guaranteed of receiving any state supplemental funds. Most tribes are not in a financial situation to provide supplemental TANF funds, especially in light of the fact that they have a service population which is disproportionately in need of TANF services.

If a tribe does not operate TANF, the state must provide TANF services to Indian people in tribal areas. The amendment would require the federal government to provide to tribes with approved TANF plans the amount of state funding (except for child care funds) which would be spent in the tribal areas. Child care funds are not included, because tribes under P.L. 104-193 are now receiving child care funds directly.

Option 2 - Separate federal authorization for funding to make up for the lack of state TANF funds for tribal TANF programs.

"(I). FUNDS FOR TRIBAL TANF PROGRAMS.
In addition to the funds provided under (a) (1) of this Section, there shall be appropriated $160 million annually for payments to tribes with approved TANF programs. The Secretary shall report to Congress of distribution of such funds, and the anticipated need for such funds as tribes assume administration of the TANF program. Funding not utilized in any fiscal year shall revert to the Treasury."

Explanation: This provides authority for an appropriation equal to 1% of the $16 billion currently provided to states for TANF to make up to the expected loss of state funds for tribes which administer the TANF program. Also, see explanation above.

AMENDMENT #2 - Support proposed DHHS Amendment regarding tribal access to loans. (see below)

4. AVAILABILITY OF TANF LOANS TO INDIAN TRIBES

Problem: Sec. 412 (f) (1) of the Social Security Act, which specifies that Indian tribes are subject to the penalty under Sec. 409 (a) (6) for failure to repay a loan under Sec. 406, indicates Congress' intent that the tribes be eligible for these loans. However, Sec. 406 speaks only in terms of loan-eligible states. The following amendment to Sec. 406 would provide explicitly for Indian tribes' eligibility for loans:

Proposed Amendment:

( ) AVAILABILITY OF FEDERAL LOANS TO INDIAN TRIBES. – Section 406 (a) is amended by adding after paragraph (2) the following:

"(3) ELIGIBILITY OF INDIAN TRIBES. – For purposes of this Section–

(A) the term 'loan eligibility state' includes an Indian tribe receiving a family assistance grant under Section 412 (a); and

(B) the reference in Subsection (C) to Section 403 (a) shall be considered, in the case of an Indian tribe, to be a reference to Section 412 (a)."

Additional Explanation to Loan Program Amendment: This provision would make tribes which operate a TANF program eligible for the federal welfare program loans. A specific use of the loan program for states is to meet their needs if Indian people move from tribal service areas to state service areas. There is significant mobility in the Indian population, and tribes would just as likely need loan funds to meet emergency needs for Indian people moving into their service areas.

The section of the law concerning the tribal TANF programs states in Section 412 (d) that nothing in that section shall preclude an Indian tribe from seeking emergency assistance from any federal loan program or emergency fund. Apparently DHHS does not think this provision is clear with regard to tribal eligibility for the Section 406 loan program.

AMENDMENT #3 - Make tribes eligible for the Contingency Fund, for bonuses based on a reduction in the rate of out-of-wedlock births, and for funding for establishment of data systems and other programs necessary for child support enforcement and TANF programs.

Title I, at the end of Section 412, add:

"(l) TRIBAL DEVELOPMENT FUNDS-

(1) ESTABLISHMENT. There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States a fund which shall be known as the "Tribal Development Fund" (in this section referred to as the "Fund").

(2) DEPOSITS INTO THE FUND. Out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, there are appropriated for fiscal years 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2001 such sums as are necessary for payment into the Fund in a total amount not to exceed $150,000,000.

(3) GRANTS. The Secretary shall make grants to tribes, taking into account tribal financial resources, unemployment, poverty data, the reduction in out-of-wedlock births, and tribal plans for child support enforcement.

Explanation: The Act provides for a $2 billion contingency fund for state welfare programs but not for tribal programs. It also provides bonuses for states, but not tribes, who reduce the rate of out-of-wedlock births. It also provides $400 million to states, but not to tribes, for data systems needed for child support enforcement programs. This amendment would provide the same array of opportunities to tribal governments as is provided to state governments.

AMENDMENT #4 - Support the Secretary's amendments on disregard of time limits in certain tribal areas. (see below)

8. TIME LIMIT ON BENEFITS: DISREGARD OF CERTAIN ASSISTANCE TO RESERVATION RESIDENTS.

Problem: In recognition of high jobless rates and lack of employment opportunities in Indian country, Sec. 408 (a) (7) (D) of the Social Security Act provides for disregard, in determining the 60-month time limit on TANF assistance to a family, of assistance to residents of Indian reservations where specified conditions are met. The current statute presents various difficulties:

(1) It requires reliance on data that may not be available. Neither the Interior Department's Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) nor any other federal agency collects monthly data on the population or labor force status of persons in reservation areas or in Alaska Native villages.

(2) It does not apply to TANF programs operated by tribes, but only to state programs.

(3) Its narrow reference to "Indian reservation" excludes important areas within the standard definition of Indian country (e.g., former reservation areas in Oklahoma).

(4) Its 1,000-person population threshold would have the clearly unintended effect of making the disregard inapplicable to residents of most Alaska Native villages, as well as a large majority of Indian reservation areas, notably many small reservations in remote areas where unemployment is particularly severe.

Proposed Amendment: (This is the DHHS - program amendment)

( ) TIME LIMIT ON BENEFITS: DISREGARD OF CERTAIN ASSISTANCE TO RESERVATION RESIDENTS.–Section 408 (a) (7) (D) is amended to read as follows:

"(D) DISREGARD OF MONTHS OF ASSISTANCE RECEIVED BY ADULTS WHILE LIVING ON TRIBAL LAND IN INDIAN COUNTRY, OR IN ALASKA NATIVE VILLAGES, WITH 50 PERCENT UNEMPLOYMENT.–

"(i) DISREGARD REQUIREMENT.– In determining the number of months for which an adult has received assistance under the state or tribal program under this part, the state or tribe shall disregard any month during which the adult lived on an Indian reservation, in Indian country occupied by a tribe, or in an Alaska native village, if the most reliable federal data available with respect to such month (or a period including such month) indicate that at least 50 percent of the Indian adults living on such Indian reservation, in Indian country occupied by such tribe, or in such village, were not employed.

"(ii) DEFINITION.– For purposes of this subparagraph, 'Indian country' has the meaning given such term in Section 1151 of Title 18 of the United States Code."

AMENDMENT #5 - Tribal Determination of BIA/GA Program Payment Levels - Providing tribes the right to determine the appropriate level of payment under the Bureau of Indian Affairs General Assistance program.

Explanation: Under the Act, Bureau of Indian Affairs General Assistance (GA) payments are tied to the level of payments made by the state in its Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) Block Grant. But, TANF, unlike its predecessor AFDC, is not an assistance program at all. A state could, for instance, emphasize using TANF for job training and transportation, and provide little funding in the form of cash assistance.

It is likely that state TANF programs will result in decreased benefits, in part because states are required to provide only 75% of the supplemental funds they previously contributed and also because states are authorized to transfer up to 30% of their TANF funds to other programs. The situation will vary from state to state, so there is no definitive answer to the question of how TANF will affect the BIA General Assistance program. It is likely that the new welfare reform law will, at least in some states, place increased pressure on the BIA General Assistance program.

The BIA/GA and the TANF (former AFDC) programs serve different constituencies:

– TANF is for families with dependent children.

– BIA General Assistance is for persons who DO NOT qualify for AFDC – so the BIA/GA program is more likely to serve older people without dependent children.

The fact that the budgetary line-item for the GA program is (as of FY 1996) in the BIA Tribal Priority Allocation budget category appears inconsistent with the Act's requirement that GA payments be tied to the level of payments in the state's TANF program. Also, there is a question as to whether the welfare reform statute's requirement that GA payments be tied to the state payment levels will apply to the BIA-administered GA programs only, or whether it will apply to both BIA and tribally-administered GA programs. The Act states that BIA General Assistance payments shall be made–

"(1) after April 29, 1985, and before October 1, 1995, on the basis of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) standards of need; and

"(2) on and after October 1, 1995, on the basis of standards of need established under the state program funded under part A of Title IV of the Social Security Act, except that where a state ratably reduced its AFDC or state program payments, the Bureau shall reduce General Assistance payments in such state by the same percentage as the state has reduced the AFDC or state program payment."

Proposed Amendment: Strike the above provision, Title I, Section 110 (k), in P. L.104-193.

AMENDMENT #6 - Child Support Enforcement Amendment - Cooperative Agreements with States. Support proposed DHHS amendment (below):

Sec. 375: CSE for Indian Tribes:

1. COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS WITH STATES.

Problems: Sec. 454 (33) of the Social Security Act, as added by Sec. 375 (a) of PRWORA, requires several minor amendments to permit implementation.

This provision as drafted sets threshold conditions for tribal participation in a cooperative agreement that represents burdensome and unnecessary barriers. This provision requires a tribal court system to have the authority to establish paternity, establish, modify and enforce support orders, and have child support guidelines established by the tribe or tribal organization. Some tribes may have the authority to accomplish some, but not all, of these functions, and may be willing to use state procedures and guidelines. Amendments made by paragraphs (1) and (2) below would permit tribal participation in cooperative agreements without requiring them to provide all services listed and to adopt tribal guidelines.

This provision also requires amendments (made by paragraph (3) and (4) below) to conform terminology to that is used in title IV-D generally.

Proposed Amendment:

( ) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS BY INDIAN TRIBES AND STATES FOR CSE.– Section 454 (33), as added by Section 375 (a) (3) of PRWORA, is amended–

(1) by striking "and enforce support orders, and" and inserting "or enforce support orders, or";

(2) by striking "guidelines established by such tribe or organization" and inserting "guidelines established or adopted by such tribe or organization";

(3) by striking "funding collected' and inserting "collections"; and

(4) by striking "such funding" and inserting "such collections".

AMENDMENT #7 - Child Support Enforcement Amendment #2 - Direct Funding to Tribes.

Title III, Section 375 (b) is amended to read:

"(b) The Secretary shall make direct payments to an Indian tribe or tribal organization which has an approved child support enforcement plan under this Section. The Secretary shall, in partnership with tribes and tribal organizations and others with expertise in the child support enforcement field in determining guidelines for provision of direct funding to tribes.

Explanation: Under the Act, a tribe would have to undertake every single activity required of a state child support enforcement plan in order to receive direct funding to administer their own plan. It is clear from the statements of the Congressional sponsors of the tribal child support enforcement provision that they intended for DHHS to provide flexibility in approving tribal programs. The amendment would remove the word "title" which implies that tribal programs – in order to receive direct DHHS funding – must comply with all state requirements and substitutes the word "Section".

The amendment would also require the Secretary to work with tribes and others in determining guidelines for direct funding to tribes under the child support enforcement program. Under the Act, the Secretary is directed to consider – in making a determination of whether a tribe may administer its own child support enforcement program – whether a state is providing services to eligible Indian recipients will have the unintended effect of discouraging tribes from working toward development of their own programs.

AMENDMENT #8 - Section 402. ELIGIBLE STATES; STATE PLAN - Section 402(a)(4) of the Social Security Act is amended –

( ) by adding the words "and tribal", after the word "local".

Explanation: This amendment will provide tribes with equal assurance, currently granted to local governments and private organizations, that they:

(A) have been consulted regarding the plan and design of welfare services in the state so that services are provided in a manner appropriate to local populations; and

(B) have had at least 45 days to submit comments on the plan and the design of such services.

AMENDMENT #9 - Support Proposed DHHS Amendment Regarding State Option of Tribal Exclusion. (see below)

5. STATE OPTION TO EXCLUDE INDIVIDUALS SUBJECT TO TRIBAL WORK PROGRAMS FROM STATE PARTICIPATION RATES.

Problem: Sec. 407(b)(4) of the Social Security Act gives states the option whether to include, in their work participation rate calculations, individuals receiving assistance under a Tribal TANF plan under Sec. 412(a)(1). States do not have the same flexibility to exclude from their participation rate calculations individuals who are in the state TANF program but are served by a tribal work program under Sec. 412(a)(2).

Under Sec. 412(a)(2), tribes that had JOBS programs in 1994 and 1995 remain eligible for grants for tribal work programs, regardless of whether they operate a TANF program. These tribal work programs are subject to neither the old JOBS rules, nor the new TANF work rules. Because individuals served by tribal work programs may not be participating in work activities at the same rate as those in state programs, and because states will face special obstacles in engaging tribal members in state work programs, it would be reasonable to give states the option to exclude them from the state participation rate calculation.

This amendment would not affect work requirements applicable to individuals.

Proposed amendment:

( ) STATE OPTION TO EXCLUDE INDIVIDUALS SUBJECT TO TRIBAL WORK PROGRAMS FROM STATE PARTICIPATION RATES.– Section 407(b)(4) of the Social Security Act is amended –

( ) in the caption, by inserting "OR WORK PROGRAM" after "FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN"; and

(2) by adding "or work program" before "approved under Section 412".

AMENDMENT #10 - Reporting Requirements for Tribal TANF Programs.

Section 412. DIRECT FUNDING AND ADMINISTRATION BY INDIAN TRIBES - Section 412(g) of the Social Security Act is amended to read:

"(g) DATA COLLECTION AND REPORTING.– Section 411 shall apply to an Indian tribe with an approved tribal family assistance plan except insofar as the Secretary finds such requirements inappropriate to the tribe's circumstances."

Explanation: State governments have operated large cash assistance programs for decades. The federal government has provided financial assistance at a 90% federal share level to assist states to develop sophisticated computerized reporting systems for their programs.

There has been no similar support for the development of tribal Management Information Systems (MIS).

The requirements of Section 411 pose challenges to state MIS systems, even in view of the federal support they have long received. These requirements are virtually impossible for any tribe to meet without the diversion of substantial amounts of the tribe's limited TANF allocation to the creation of a new and very complex MIS capability.
The proposed amendment would enable the Secretary to modify the Section 411 requirements on a case-by-case basis to adapt them to tribal capabilities.
The proposed amendment has no budgetary impact.

AMENDMENT #11 - Tribal Inclusion in the Secretary's Research, Evaluations, and National Studies of TANF Programs.

Section 413. RESEARCH, EVALUATIONS, AND NATIONAL STUDIES - Include tribes in more activities.

Section 414. STUDY BY THE CENSUS BUREAU - Include tribes in the Census Bureau's data collection activities.

Proposed Amendment:

- SEC. 413(a) Research.- is amended by inserting the words "and Tribal" after the word State.

- SEC. 413(b)(1) In General.- is amended by inserting the words "and Tribes" after the word States.

- SEC. 413(c) Dissemination of Information.- is amended by inserting after the word State a comma (,) followed by the word "Tribes".

- SEC. 413(f) State-Initiated Evaluations.- - is amended by inserting the words "or Tribe" after the word State.

- SEC. 413(f)(2) - is amended by inserting the words "and Tribes;" after the word States. SEC. 413(h)(3)(C) - is amended by inserting by "striking the period" after the word communities., and inserting a comma (,) followed by the clause "including tribal communities."

- SEC. 414(a) In General.- is amended by inserting the words "and Tribal" after the word State.

Explanation: This amendment will mandate that the Secretary conduct research on tribal TANF programs as well as state TANF programs, including information on potential benefits, effects, and costs of operating different TANF programs. These studies will also include information regarding the development of time limits relating to eligibility for assistance as well as effects that these programs may have on welfare dependency, illegitimacy, teen pregnancy, employment rates, child well-being, and any other area the Secretary deems appropriate.

AMENDMENT #12 - Tribal Retrocession.

Section 412. DIRECT FUNDING AND ADMINISTRATION BY INDIAN TRIBES - Section 412 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding:

"(l) TRIBAL RETROCESSION. A tribe administering a tribal assistance plan under this section may, by notifying the Secretary and the state not less than 90 days prior to the beginning of the new fiscal year, choose not to implement that plan for such identified fiscal year."

Explanation: This amendment will allow a tribe to retrocede a tribal family assistance grant to the Secretary in the event that preconditions identified in the tribal assistance plan do not exist. Upon notice of retrocession to the Secretary, the Secretary shall withhold amounts otherwise due the tribe under this section and pay such amounts to the appropriate state upon terms and conditions contained in this part.

AMENDMENT #13 - Amend Title I, Section 402 (A) (5) as follows:

CERTIFICATION THAT THE STATE WILL PROVIDE INDIANS WITH EQUITABLE ACCESS TO ASSISTANCE-A certification by the chief executive office of the state that, during the fiscal year, the state will provide each member of an Indian tribe who is domiciled in the state and is not eligible for assistance under a tribal family assistance plan approved under Section 412 with equitable ~~access to~~ assistance under the state program ~~funded under this part attributable to funds provided by the Federal government~~.

Explanation: As currently written, the state is required to provide equitable access to people who are members of Indian tribes (as defined in the Indian Self-Determination Act) whose tribe does not administer a TANF program to services attributable to federal funds. Indian people are citizens of states, and should be eligible for TANF services which are funded through the required state match or other state funds. As a practical matter, states would have a difficult time determining which TANF services are funded through federal verses state funds, as the funds will be co-mingled.

The term "access" with regard to services would be dropped as it is vague and unenforceable. Rather, the state is required to provide equitable services.

AMENDMENT #14 - Amend Title I, Section 410, by adding:

" (d) TRIBAL APPEALS.–The Secretary shall establish an appeals process for tribes and tribal organizations of adverse actions under this part which is comparable to that provided for states."

Explanation: This amendment will provide tribal governments an appeals process similar to that provided to state governments under this section.

Re: Responses to Supplemental Questions on Tribal Welfare Reform

Dear Chairman Campbell

NCAI appreciates this opportunity to provide further information to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs' hearing record of April 14, 1999 over the implementation of welfare revisions in Indian Country as posed to us in your letter dated April 22, 1999.

1. It is now three years after welfare reform was enacted. Why are so few Indian tribes administering the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) block grant?

   In the simplest terms, this is due to a lack of resources, both financial and nonfinancial Moreover, TANF is only a piece of the puzzle to improve the quality of life for Indian people. Significant needs in infrastructure improvement, economic development, job creation, education and training, and technical assistance must all be met if more tribes are expected to develop and maintain the operation of highly sophisticated and expensive welfare assistance, social service and work placement programs As we alluded to in our written statement, unless a tribe can secure supplemental funding over and above what the federal government provides directly to tribes to operate tribal TANF programs, it makes little fiscal sense for many tribes to pursue such an initiative.

   In addition, the enormous support services required to move remote reservation populations from welfare assistance into the work force, all within a timely manner in order to maintain the

TANF recipient's limited eligibility for cash assistance during such transitions, is proving quite difficult for most tribes to achieve. The goal of moving welfare recipients into the work force is a laudable one, supported by many tribal governments. However, without jobs, economic growth, improved transportation services, proper child care, adequate health care, better housing and other necessary programs and services, Indian Country's fight to reverse generations of poverty, even through TANF participation, is not optimistic.

2. It looks to me that legislation may be necessary to ensure tribes are able to make welfare reform a success. Do the amendments contained in your testimony reflect the consensus of tribes nationally?

Yes, Mr. Chairman, we believe they do. Although NCAI is a member organization, when substantial changes in federal law and policy significantly impact tribes, such as welfare reform, NCAI's efforts are inclusive of all tribal participation, as provided through the directive of our member tribes. Soon after the welfare reform law was enacted, tribes met in open meetings in Phoenix, AZ, Seattle, WA and Washington, D.C. to create an official tribal leaders position on welfare reform and to begin crafting an outline of legislative issues. These efforts eventually became the basis for the tribal amendments' package to welfare reform submitted to Congress in February 1997, by NCAI on behalf of Indian Country. As noted in our written testimony, a few of these tribal amendments were included in the Balanced Budget Act as technical corrections to the original law.

Since the original amendments' package was developed, NCAI has facilitated a series of national forums on welfare reform throughout Indian Country. Through these forums, updated information on welfare reform's impacts was gathered and shared, leading to the additional suggestions for change in the law that was made part of our written testimony. Let me stress again that both member and nonmember tribes have consistently participated in NCAI's welfare reform efforts, along with the development of its official positions. The NCAI Welfare Reform Force, created to advise the organization on welfare reform issues, consists of tribal leaders and formidable tribal welfare reform experts from both member and nonmember tribes throughout Indian Country.

3. Last year I introduced amendments to the "477" law to allow tribes to use "477" funds for "job creation purposes." Would NCAI support such a bill if it were reintroduced?

NCAI strongly supports the right of tribes to use their federal resources in more flexible ways. This flexibility is particularly important in dealing with the challenges of welfare reform. Conventionally narrow, program-specific approaches to serving the needs of Indian tribes are becoming more and more inappropriate. Tribes are developing their own unique concepts to federal program delivery under self-determination initiatives and are moving toward greater self-sufficiency as a result. Tribes operating under "477" plans have experienced some of the greatest success in this area, along with many self-governance compact tribes.

However, since your introduction of S. 1279 in the last Congress, we understand that the "477" tribes themselves have reported to the Committee that the circumstances which gave rise to S. 1279 are no longer prevalent. Therefore, the question may not be one of reintroducing S. 1279 in the current Congress, but rather, one of looking at what the "477" tribes have recently accomplished and exploring whether the concepts behind S. 1279 may be applicable to programs beyond employment and training. In doing so, NCAI urges the Committee to include perspectives from all tribes, well beyond that of just "477" tribes, and that NCAI would be happy to participate with the Committee in such an exploration.

4. My staff has compiled an agency-by-agency list of all the programs that are eligible for inclusion into the "477" program. Do you support the large-scale widening of "477" for the purposes of services delivery to welfare recipients?

Again, the idea of giving tribes the ability to use their federal resources in more flexible ways is consistent with the principles of self-determination, self-governance and tribal sovereignty. NCAI understands that the tribes participating in "477" have been able to significantly improve many of their own tribal services and further their employment goals, two areas of improvement that are critical to successful welfare reform implementation in Indian Country. NCAI supports each tribe's ability to make its services to its members more effective.

With that said, it is important to understand that tribes have not directed NCAI to support any specific "477" expansion initiatives. This does not mean that the concept of expanding tribal flexibility over federal program authority is not a concept supportable by NCAI. It only means that before NCAI can take such a position, it must wait until tribal leaders have had an opportunity to fully deliberate such a legislative initiative and then direct NCAI as to its official position on the pertinent issues. NCAI would expect tribes to deliberate such an initiative at one of its upcoming sessions, once more information is made available on this proposal by the Committee. NCAI would also be happy to help inform Indian Country as to the particulars of the Committee's "477" program expansion initiative, as well as report back to the Committee any official position developed by tribal leaders.

NCAI hopes that these responses are satisfactory in providing additional information on the issues raised in your questions. If you have further questions, or require additional information, please do not hesitate to contact me, or JoAnn K. Chase, NCAI Executive Director, at (202) 466-7767.

THE NAVAJO NATION
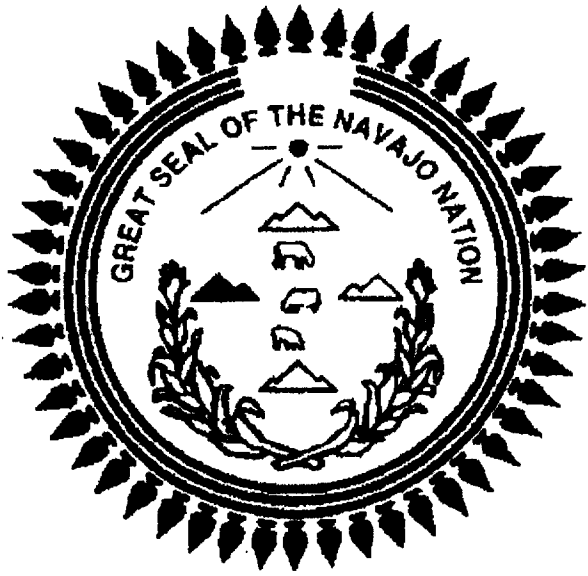
TO THE
UNITED STATES SENATE
COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS



Presented By: Taylor McKenzie, M.D., Vice-President
The Navajo Nation

THE NAVAJO NATION
ON WELFARE REFORM
TO THE
UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

BACKGROUND

Section 412 of Public Law 104-193, the Personal Responsibility and Working Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996, also known as the Welfare Reform Act, authorizes Indian Tribes to apply for direct block grants to administer a tribal "Temporary Assistance to Needy Families" (TANF) program. This program is the former Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) currently administered by the states. The Navajo Nation has recognized this opportunity and established the Navajo Nation Welfare Reform Advisory Committee (NNWRAC) in December 1996 to plan and develop the "Navajo Nation TANF Plan" pursuant to the Section 412 application process. The advisory committee has diligently worked on the Tribal Family Assistance Grant for TANF and developed a comprehensive plan that encompasses the administration and services delivery area of the States of Arizona, New Mexico and Utah. However, the Navajo Nation more importantly recognized the issue of tribal sovereignty and self-determination as a basis of developing a TANF program that would allow benefits to TANF recipients.

FEDERAL TRUST RESPONSIBILITY

The Navajo Nation signed the Treaty of 1868 with the Federal Government that spelled out certain trust responsibilities that the United States government would uphold and carry out for the Navajo people. The trust responsibilities of the federal government include: provision of services and goods to meet needs such as, health care, education, law enforcement, social services and other services to sustain our people. However, throughout the past century, the U.S. Congress has passed laws to further oppress the Indian people and the Federal Government has carried out these laws to diminish the human spirit and dignity of the Indian people. The Navajo people have endured and persevered many hardships imposed by these laws. In the 1930's, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) imposed the Livestock Reduction Act on the Navajo people, whose very lives depended on their livestock. During the 1950's, the federal government again tried to assimilate Indian people through their Relocation Program by relocating Navajo families off the reservations hoping they could mainstream them into the white dominate society. This program was a total failure. And now, within the last twenty years, the federal government is again further oppressing the Indian people by failing to recognize and uphold the trust responsibilities that they had promised to the Indian people, through its "streamlining" of federal programs and services and "balancing" of the federal budget thereby, reducing federal funds for much needed human services programs and services. The Welfare Reform Act, which provides block grants to states and to those Indian tribes who opt to administer their own TANF program, attempts to do this again. Section 412 of the Welfare Reform Act changed the entire perspective of tribal-to-federal government relationships, by imposing the tribal-to-state government relationships, thereby undermining the "government-to-government" relationships that tribes initially had with the federal government. Indian tribes established this government-to-government relationship through Treaties that were signed with the United States Government long ago. In enacting the Welfare Reform Act, Congress has again failed to recognize the government-to-government relationships that was established through treaties signed with the Federal government. By assigning the administration and implementation of the TANF programs directly to states, Congress has given States "total rein" on the enactment of this law. Once again, as a sovereign nation, the Navajo Nation is forced to work with and through state governments to get what should have been received directly from the Federal government. This process further fragments and diminishes the tribal-to-federal government relationship established and honored through treaties. The Navajo Nation does not have treaties with the states. The Navajo Nation has a signed treaty with the United States Government. Therefore, the Navajo Nation will work directly with Congress, the Senate, and the Federal government agencies to gain the funds necessary to provide services for its own people.

PUBLIC LAW 93-638, INDIAN SELF-DETERMINATION AND EDUCATION ASSISTANCE ACT

It is for this very reason, the Navajo Nation has submitted its tribal TANF Plan, pursuant to Public Law 93-638, as amended. Public Law 93-638 is called the "Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975", and was amended in 1994. This law authorizes Indian tribes to take control of federal programs, such as education, social services, health, law enforcement and other federal programs historically administered by the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) or Indian Health Services (IHS). In the past twenty years, the Navajo Nation has assumed control over a large number of these federally operated programs and services, using the '638 contracting process.

25 CFR Part 900 outlines the '638 contracting process, wherein it states "The Secretary (DHHS) shall, upon request of an Indian tribe or tribal organization and subject to the availability of appropriations, provide technical assistance on a non-reimbursable basis to such Indian tribe or tribal organization to develop a new contract proposal or to provide for the assumption by the Indian tribe or tribal organization of any program, service, function, or activity (or portion thereof) that is contractible under this Act." Thus, it is through this formally established and prescribed process that the Navajo Nation is requesting the Secretary of DHHS to contract the TANF block grant funds to the Navajo Nation, through a Public Law 93-638 contract proposal. The following is a chronology of the Nation's pursuit of the Public Law 93-638 contract:

- October 06, 1997 - The Navajo Nation submitted to the Secretary of Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) the "Notice of Intent" to contract the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) Program pursuant to Public Law 93-638, as amended.

- November 13, 1997 - The Navajo Nation received a fax copy of a letter from DHHS Secretary Donna Shalala informing the Nation of her decision to deny the Nation's Public Law 93-638 TANF contract proposal, citing that "the TANF program is not one that operates for the particular benefits of Indians or for non-Indians, rather the TANF program is intended to operate for the benefit of needy families without consideration for the status of these families as Indian or non-Indian".

- December 11, 1997 - The Navajo Nation exercised its option to formally appeal the Secretary's decision and submitted the "Notice of Appeal" to the Interior Board of Indian Appeals (IBIA)in Washington, D.C. On December 17, 1997, the IBIA received a motion from the Secretary seeking dismissal of the appeal on the grounds that the Navajo Nation's notice of appeal failed to comply with 25 CFR.

- January 20, 1998 - The IBIA dismissed the Nation's appeal and left the option for the Nation to file a complaint in Federal District Court.

- February 24, 1998 - The Navajo Nation filed a complaint in the United States District Court in Phoenix, Arizona, seeking to reverse the decision of the Secretary, and order the Secretary to enter into a '638 contract.

- May 07, 1998 - The Secretary of DHHS moved to dismiss all claims against her.

- June 30, 1998 - The Secretary of DHHS replied to the Nation's response to her motion to dismiss.

- March 11, 1999 - The Federal District Court Judge dismissed the Nation's lawsuit.

OPTIONS

The Navajo Nation is currently reviewing the following options:

1. Appeal the Dismissal
2. Legislative Fix
3. Submit the 412 Application

The Navajo Nation respectfully requests Congress' support and consideration of the Public Law 93-638, contract proposal to administer a tribal TANF program. This process will enable more effective coordination, integrate and strengthen tribal procedures, and allow the Navajo Nation to access funding resources such as, contract support funds, indirect costs funds, pre-award costs funds, and annual operating budgets to fully and successfully implement a Tribal "Family Assistance Grant" TANF Program. The '638 funding process will also allow the Navajo Nation to work with the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) and the Indian Health Services (IHS) in identifying and procuring funds for infrastructure and facilities development. The Navajo Nation further requests that Congress conveys the Navajo Nation's plan to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

NAVAJO NATION TANF PROJECT

The Navajo Nation TANF Project (NNTP) office is established under the Executive Office within the Navajo Division of Social Services (NDSS). NDSS has taken the lead role in establishing the Navajo Tribal TANF Program and chairing the Navajo Nation Welfare Reform Advisory Committee (NNWRAC) as delegated by the Navajo Nation President. The purpose of the TANF Project office is to plan and develop the "Navajo Nation TANF Program", to develop the tribal TANF policy, TANF MIS, facility and infrastructure development, and to create a plan of operation for the new program. Currently, the TANF Project is funded by Navajo Nation General Funds in the amount of $1,516,000 appropriated by the Navajo Nation Council.

The Proposed Navajo Nation TANF Program:

- Will provide family cash assistance to 27,615 needy families on the Navajo Nation and reduce their dependency on public assistance by promoting job preparation, work and family stability through personal responsibility by participating in appropriate social and economic self-sufficiency activities.

- Will serve all eligible Navajo families and individuals who reside on or near the Navajo Nation in defined service delivery area (SDA) in the States of Arizona, New Mexico and Utah in accordance to the AFDC client population in FY 1994 Statistics Data received from the states.

- Will create and establish a workforce development department to provide a collaboration of employment support services to coordinate the Welfare Reform Act services to Navajo families and individuals residing in the Navajo Nation.

- The workforce development department will have ten (10) regional field offices throughout the Navajo Nation creating (110) new positions for the program.

- Will meet and comply with Public Law 104-193, Section 412 provisions, i.e. mandatory work requirements, penalties, data collection, and reporting requirements.

PROPOSED FUNDING

FEDERAL - DHHS

Under Public Law 104-193, Section 412, the Act authorizes the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) to appropriate block grant funds to approved tribal TANF programs. It is currently estimated that the Navajo Nation TANF Program will receive an amount equal to the amount the states (Arizona, New Mexico, & Utah) spent in administering it's AFDC and related programs provided in the (Navajo Nation) service delivery area in FY 1994:

FY 1999 - $ 34,552,091
FY 2000 - $ 34,552,091
FY 2001 - $ 34,552,091
FY 2002 - $ 34,552,091

ISSUES FOR THE 106th CONGRESS

Significant Barriers In Producing Positive Outcomes Of Welfare Reform In The Navajo Nation

- There currently exists a non-coordination of federal "welfare-to-work" related services, e.g. Department of Health and Human Services / Department of Labor / Department of Interior and other federal "stakeholders" to coordinate and collaborate with Indian tribes to effectively implement a tribal TANF Program.
- There is a lack of technical assistance and planning guidance for the Navajo Nation and Indian tribes to develop their own comprehensive tribal TANF program.

- Currently, Indian tribes are authorized to receive Bonus grants as allowed to states under Section 403 of the Act to reward high performance in operating a tribal TANF program. Indian tribes should be equally allowed to this same provision.

- Indian tribes should be allowed to request for Contingency funds in Section 403 of the Act.

The Role of the Federal Government vis-a-vis States, Tribal Government, Localities and Private Groups.

- The United States Government and Congress must recognize tribal sovereignty and work directly with Indian Tribes to successfully implement and administer the tribal TANF programs. The Navajo Nation strongly advocates for an effective "government-to-government" relationship with the federal government.

- Federal "partnership" must exist at the national level and this must be conveyed to all Federal Regional Offices, e.g. Region VI - Dallas, Region VII - Denver, & Region IX - San Francisco offices.

Critical Partnership That Must Be Forged

- Welfare Reform forces tribal programs to collaborate and consolidate within the tribal organization, which means reorganizing their family assistance and employment support services to meet the needs to the TANF recipients. Therefore, it is imperative that these collaboration and consolidation efforts happen at the federal level between the Departments of Labor (DOL), Health & Human Services (DHHS) , and Interior (DOI). In essence, all federal funding related to employment, training and needed support services must be consolidated under "one administrative umbrella" in order to totally benefit the TANF clientele.

- Internally, the Navajo Nation administration and programs identified to provide the family assistance and employment support services for the proposed Workforce Development Department must coordinate and collaborate to bring together an integrated and consolidated effort for TANF services.

Best Models and Initiatives

- The Navajo Nation continues to advocate for the approval of a Public Law 93-638, as amended, contract proposal, thereby allowing the Nation to effectively administer its own TANF program. The '638 contracting process will allow the Nation to access funding and resources such as Contract Support Funds, Indirect Cost Funds, Pre-Award Costs Funds, and Annual Budget Funds, to fully and successfully implement its TANF program. Finally, the '638 funding method will allow the Nation to work with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Services in identifying and procuring funds for infrastructure and facilities development, to further support the implementation of the Navajo Nation TANF program.

- The 1975 Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act gave Indian Tribes the authority to contract with the Federal Government to operate programs serving their tribal members and other eligible persons. In August 1996, the new amendments to Public Law 93-638 became final. The new statute provides expanded contracting opportunities within DHHS and DOI. Consolidated contracts are now permitted which will significantly reduce reporting requirements. The changes also allow for redesign of the program to meet tribal needs and desires.

- More importantly, the Navajo Nation explicitly requests the Federal government pursuant to Indian Self-Determination, Section 102, § 450f., of PUBLIC LAW 93-638, as amended, " That Secretary is directed, upon request of any Indian tribe by tribal resolution, to enter into a self-determination contract or contracts with tribal organization to plan, conduct, and administer programs or portions thereof, including construction programs (E) for the benefit of Indians because of their status as Indians without regard to the agency or office of the Department of Health and Human Services or the Department of the Interior within which it is performed".

PROBLEMS / RECOMMENDATIONS

Public Law 104-193 "Personal Responsibility Working Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996"

Summary of Issue: Section 412 of the law authorizes Indian tribes to apply for and administer their own tribal Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) program has several outstanding issues that affect Indian tribes, in particularly the Navajo Nation.

Recommendation(s):
Funding

- Block grant funding for Indian tribes would be based on the state's (Arizona/New Mexico/Utah) calculation of its expenditures of Federal AFDC funds for Navajo Nation's recipients in FY 1994. The funds is only limited to the cash assistance benefits paid to the recipients and the administration costs for the expenses on tribal TANF recipients. Under Section 412 There is no funding for:

- Start-up costs
- Contract Support Costs
- Indirect Costs
- Pre-award Costs
- Access to BIA or IHS real property, equipment, and housing for TANF program.

Carryover

- There is no provision for tribes to carryover unobligated TANF funds into the succeeding fiscal years. Tribes are required to revert unobligated funds to the federal government while states are allowed to carryover these funds

Tribal to Federal Agencies Consultation

- There still lacks the tribal government to federal agency consultation on tribal TANF development.

Planning Funds

- The Welfare Reform Act provides no funding to plan, develop and implement a comprehensive tribal TANF program including:

  - computer automation development
  - policy manual development
  - infrastructure/facility development
  - other pertinent program development costs.

Public Law 105-33 Balance Budget Act of 1997

Summary of Issue: The Balance Budget Act of 1997 helps to achieve the goal by authorizing the U.S. Department of Labor (DOL) to provide "Welfare-to-Work" grants to states and local communities to create additional job opportunities for the hardest-to-employ recipients of TANF. These grants provides many welfare recipients with the job placement services, transitional em,ployment, and other support services they need to make the sucessful progression into long-term unsubsidized employment.

Welfare-to-Work Program

The Navajo Nation received $2.4 Million for Fiscal Year 1998 Welfare-to-Work services. 70% of funds are targeted for TANF recipients who lacks GED/high school diploma, recipients substance abuse treatment and has poor work history. 30% of funds are for school dropout, teen pregnancy, poor work history or non-custodial parents of minors whose custodial parent is a welfare recipient.

Recommendation:

- Congress should reauthorize the 1% set-aside for the tribal Welfare-to-Work (WtW) program funds which expires at the end of Fiscal Year 1999. This will effect the Navajo Nation which receives $2.4 million for WtW services which serves tribal TANF recipients.

- Provide some flexibility and widen the client eligibility for services. The navajo nation requests that TANF recipients who are high school / GED graduates with low reading or math be included in the 70% category.

- Increase the 1% set-aside for Indian tribes to 3% level of funding for tribes. The costs of training and educating unskilled and uneducated tribal members are high and the additional appropriation would allow for skill development.

45 CFR Parts 286 & 287 NPRM

Summary of Issue: In July 1998, the Administration for Children and Families (ACF), Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) published a Notice of Proposed Rule making (NPRM) for tribal Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) and the Native Employment Works (NEW) program with a comment period which was extended to November 20, 1998. The proposed rule is entitled 45 CFR Parts 286 and 287 respectively.

Recommendation:

Tribal Consultation

- Promulgation of final rule should be suspended until additional tribal consultation / negotiation is completed.

The Honorable Ben Nighthorse Campbell, Chairman
United States Senate Committee on Indian Affairs
Washington, D.C. 20510-6450

Dear Mr. Chairman.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to testify before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs on April 14th concerning the impacts of welfare reform in Indian country. As you are aware, the Navajo Nation will apply for the administration of it's own tribal Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) program and the testimony presented on behalf of the Navajo Nation, reflects on critical issues to fully implement the tribal TANF program In sincerity, we ask that the Committee ponder these facts and to support the Navajo Nation's intent to contract the TANF program pursuant to Public Law 93-638, as amended. The following is our response to your questions raised in your letter dated April 22nd:

1. The Navajo Nation has petitioned the HHS to contract the TANF program using Self-Determination contracts What is the status of the litigation that has resulted from the denial of the petition?

On March 11, 1999, Judge Roger Strand, Federal District Court, Phoenix, Arizona, ruled to dismiss the Navajo Nation's declination appeal to contract the tribal TANF program under Public Law 93-638, as amended. This granted the Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala's motion to dismiss the case against her claiming that "...TANF is not a contractible program under Public Law 93-638". The decision leaves the Navajo Nation with three options.

- Appeal the Decision to the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals
- Offer a Legislative "Fix" through the United States Congress.
- Submit a Tribal Family Assistance Grant application under Public Law 104-193, Section 412.

The Navajo Nation will pursue all three options.

2. Because of its unique geography, Navajo must deal with 3 state governments. What has your experience with these states been as far as implementing welfare reform goes?

The Welfare Reform Act has forced Indian tribes to work even closer with the state governments. The Navajo Nation is very fortunate to have established a good working relationship with the States of Arizona, New Mexico and Utah. Currently, there are several state administered and federal funded programs in which the Navajo Nation receives services for Navajo clients. Thus, there exists a strong relationship with the states. In January 1997, the Navajo Nation established the Navajo Nation Welfare Reform Task Force (NNWRTF) which immediately began to dialogue with the states. Each state had implemented their state TANF plans and programs which provides statewide cash assistance, food stamp and medical assistance services to welfare recipients, including our Navajo recipients. However, some of these state plans were very punitive, stringent, and not culturally sensitive to tribal issues. Most outstanding was that the state plans did not consider the economic conditions of the Indian reservations regarding work activities. Our task force made the states aware of these and many other issues. As a result, the Navajo Nation and the states established a "transition team" which have addressed several issues and frequently meet to dialogue on the Nation's implementation plan. The Navajo Nation has assured the states to comply with Section 402(5) of the Welfare Reform Act which certifies that the states will provide Indian with equitable access to assistance. On the contrary, the state records have not been too good on other aspects, i e. Title XX and Child Support Enforcement programs, even though the Navajo Nation has mutually entered into agreements with these states.

3. What is the difference in matching funds provided by the different states that Navajo works with?

By law, the states are not required to provide any state match funds to tribally approved TANF programs, however, the states we deal with have considered this matter and have enacted state legislation to provide match funds. For example, during the 1998 state legislative session, the State of Arizona approved Senate Bill 1357, a bill which contained legislative language to authorize the state to "...provide (state) matching monies at a rate that is consistent with the applicable fiscal year budget and that is not more than the state matching rate for the Aid to Families with dependent children program as t existed on July 01, 1994" (§ 35.section 46-134 Arizona revised Statutes) for tribally approved TANF programs. Currently, other Indian tribes administering a tribal TANF programs such as the Pascua Yaqui and White Mountain Apache tribes in Arizona are provided with TANF state match funds. During the 1999 New Mexico State Legislative session, the Navajo Nation introduced and pursued Senate Bill 383 to authorize the state to provide state match funds for tribally approved TANF programs within the state. The state projected that the Navajo Nation would receive about $3.0 million in state match funds, however, this will be determined by the Navajo Nation's service delivery area (SDA). Unfortunately, this bill died during the regular session, however, it will be reintroduced during the state's special session beginning on May 04, 1999 in Santa Fe, NM. The Navajo Nation did not introduce a legislative bill in the State of Utah, however, it received a verbal commitment from the state that it will provide state match funds. The Utah legislative initiative will be addressed during the next state legislative session in the Year 2000, of course, it is critical to get the state match. Without these funds, the Navajo Nation begins delivery services with less funding to a population previously served by the states. To a real sense, this relieves the state's burden while increasing the tribal burden with fewer resources. However, given the current state of welfare reform, the only way to ensure the receipt of the state match is to convince the state legislatures to appropriate these funds specifically .

4. My staff has compiled an agency-by-agency list of all the programs that are eligible for inclusion into the "477" program. Do you support the large-scale widening of "477" for purposes of services delivery to welfare recipients?

Yes. In fact, this is the very reason the Navajo Nation is pushing for a contract approval under Public Law 93-638. Under Public Law 102-477, the "Indian Employment, Training, and Related Services Demonstration Act", Indian programs can integrate all welfare related services under one-single agency, create a single budget, and submit a single report. This concept is very feasible for Indian tribes to "streamline" duplicated efforts, rather than fragmenting services, budgets, and data collection and reporting requirements. If provisions under '477 are expanded, then it would make the program design and service delivery more effective and efficient. Program flexibility is needed to carry out the goals and objectives of TANF and other welfare related services.
The scope of services can clearly be defined and focused to serve the needs of tribal welfare recipients. The measurable outcomes of this type of service delivery is to perform actual services directly to the welfare recipient and their family. Therefore, the Navajo Nation supports the large-scale widening of Public Law 102-477. Of course, it would be significantly more advantageous to use the mechanism of P.L. 93-638 contracting.

5. Are you supportive of what the National Congress of American Indians has developed in terms of amendments to the Welfare Reform Act?

Yes. In fact, we have two Navajo individuals representing the Navajo Nation on NCAI's Welfare Reform Task Force. More importantly, I request that you and the committee, support the Navajo Nation's legislative amendments of the Welfare Reform Act.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Navajo Nation, I thank you and the Committee for the opportunity to testify on the impacts of welfare reform in Indian country. We, along with our Native brothers and sisters, urge the Committee to truly understand the issues on our reservations as we continue to strive for self-sufficiency and self-determination. The Navajo Nation clearly extends tribal sovereignty as a means to support the provisions of the law. Again, we respectfully encourage the Congress to strengthen the government-to-government relationship on these and many important issues ahead. Thank you.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES (TANF) ON AMERICAN INDIAN RESERVATIONS. EARLY EVIDENCE FROM ARIZONA

Early experience of TANF implementation on American Indian reservations within Arizona

A testimony by
Eddie F. Brown and Shanta Pandey, George Warren Brown School of Social Work, Washington University, St. Louis

April 14, 1999

We are happy to share with you today some of the findings from our study on the implementation of TANF on American Indian reservations. We are funded by the DHHS to monitor the impacts of the 1996 federal welfare reform legislation on American Indian families with children on reservations. The views offered in this policy testimony are solely those of the authors. As far as we know, we are the only longitudinal study in the country engaged in monitoring the impact of TANF on American Indian reservations. We are funded for five years (1997-2002). We have launched our study on reservations within the state of Arizona. Our goal is to inform the public policy debate on the strengths and weaknesses of the 1996 federal welfare reform legislation as it develops on American Indian reservations.

This testimony is based on the data we have collected since October 1997. It focuses on aspects of the 1996 welfare legislation implementation in Indian communities within Arizona. We analyzed secondary data from administrative sources relevant to the implementation of welfare reform legislation in Indian communities. In addition, we collected and analyzed primary (qualitative and quantitative) data regarding welfare reform options implemented on reservations and their impacts. Primary data are from in-depth telephone interviews with service providers in 15 of the 21 reservations within Arizona. This information was substantiated by two site visits to three reservations where we conducted focus group interviews with state and tribal social service providers and welfare recipients. Finally, with the help of trained tribal interviewers we are currently interviewing current or former welfare recipients from three reservations using a structured questionnaire. We have included a few preliminary findings from the structured questionnaire in this testimony. The following are the early experiences of tribes, as well as early evidence of impacts of TANF implementation on women with children on American Indian reservations within Arizona:

1. Increased legislative authority to tribes to self-administer welfare policies and services: As the 1996 welfare law has put an end to AFDC as entitlement to individuals, it has also bestowed power upon tribal governments who wish to administer their own programs. Until now, states have been the principal administrators of AFDC programs, including the administration of AFDC benefits to American Indian families on reservations. Of the 500 tribes and 310 reservations recorded in the country by the 1990

Census (Shumway & Jackson, 1995), only five tribes, all located in Wisconsin,[1] had previously subcontracted with the state to provide AFDC and to determine eligibility requirements for Food Stamp and Medicaid on their reservations. In contrast, the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 has given an option to each tribe to either participate in its respective state program or submit its own TANF administration plan to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) to receive direct funds to administer the block grant.[2] Tribal plans can be different from the federal mandate in that the law allows tribes the flexibility to determine: (a) their own service populations, (b) their definitions of "family," (c) the scope of assistance, (d) job participation rates, and (e) variations in time limitations (see section 412 of the PRWORA) (U.S. Congress, 1996).

There is much interest among tribes in Arizona, as well as in tribes in other states, to utilize this new option and exercise authority over the administration of TANF. Nationally, as of January 1999, 22 Indian Tribal Organizations had submitted their own tribal TANF administration plans to the DHHS. So far, the DHHS has approved the plans of 18 tribes and one consortium (see table 1). In comparison with other Indian communities, the Indian communities with approved plans are generally smaller and have lower levels of unemployment. Three of the 19 Indian Organizations are in Arizona (Pascua Yaqui, Salt River and White Mountain). In general, state plans tend to be more stringent than federal requirements, whereas the tribal plans tend to be more generous than state requirements. For instance, Arizona's Department of Economic Security (DES) institutes a two-year time limit[3] on benefit receipt within the first five years of receiving benefit, whereas the Pascua Yaqui Tribe (in Arizona) waives the two-year time limit for adult recipients who are meeting the work activity requirement.

Several other Arizona tribes expect to have a self-administration plan developed within the next few years. Tribes that have elected to stay with the state-administered TANF program are either gathering information so they may position themselves to self-administer TANF, or are disinterested as they are nearly "welfare independent" and have very few TANF households. Seven tribes (Ak-Chin, Cocopah, Fort McDowell, Fort Mojave, Havasupai, Kaibab Paiute and Yavapai Apache) (see table 2) have less than seven households receiving TANF. Five tribes (Ak-Chin, Cocopah, Fort McDowell, Fort Mojave and Yavapai Prescott) have either employment opportunities (due to economic development opportunities within or near reservations) or tribal per capita payments, which disqualify families for receipt of other welfare assistance (e.g., TANF, Tribal General Assistance).

2. Limitations of the 1996 federal welfare legislation on tribal administration of TANF: The option for tribes to administer their own TANF programs has been praised as an example of the "government-to-government" relationship between tribes and the federal government. However, as tribes begin to develop plans for self-administration of TANF programs, they are also noticing the legislation's limitations. For instance, the 1996 federal welfare legislation fails to treat them on par with the states. This is especially evident in three areas: unexpended TANF funds, funds to evaluate their performance, and federal rewards for "successful" work. In the first area, unexpended TANF funds, states are allowed to keep these funds for future (unlimited time) use, but tribes must return any unexpended federal funds to the federal government within two years. In regards to the second area, performance evaluation funds, states receive additional money to evaluate their performance, whereas tribes that implement TANF independently do not receive evaluation money. Finally, with respect to the third area, federal rewards for "successful" work, states receive incentives for reducing caseloads, unwed births and teen pregnancies, whereas tribes do not receive any incentives, even when they are able to make reductions in the same areas.

[1] Red Cliff, the Bad River Indian Band of Lake Superior, Lac du Flambeau, Oneida and Stockbridge Munsee.

[2] Tribes may lose their portions of state matching funds if this option is chosen; however, Arizona has passed legislation that will allow tribes to retain state matching funds.

[3] In Arizona, the adult portion of the benefit is eliminated after a family reaches the two-year time limit within the first five years, but cash assistance for the children in the family is continued for the full five years. The two-year time limit began on November 1, 1995 and the 60-month lifetime limit began on October 1, 1996.

Also noteworthy is that tribes administering their own TANF programs may not receive state matching funds, support costs and start-up money. As such, tribal leaders and service providers are concerned that devolution of responsibility for TANF administration without commensurate allocation of financial resources to the tribes may render the policy ineffective. Currently, we are aware of only nine states in the nation (Alaska, Arizona, California, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, Oregon, Washington and Wyoming) that have agreed to provide state matching funds to tribes that administer their own TANF services (U.S. DHHS, 1998). It is important to note that, 13 of the 19 Indian communities that are currently self-administering TANF come from these nine states that provide matching funds. This evidence underscores the importance of providing matching funds to expedite tribal takeover of TANF programs.

3. The 1996 federal welfare legislation's impact on enhancing organizational coordination, communication and collaboration: According to state and tribal social service administrators, under the 1996 welfare legislation both states and tribes find it advantageous to ensure the coordination and provision of TANF and related services. The legislation has strengthened coordination, communication and collaboration at all levels--among tribal social service providers, between tribes, between tribes and states, and between tribes and the federal government. At the tribal level, for instance, coordination, collaboration and communication have increased among the staffs of social services, employment training, childcare and education, as well as between the staffs of other social service units. Increased coordination, communication and collaboration is an early positive effect of TANF legislation and may improve tribes' efforts to serve families with children in need in the future.

4. Changes at the community level under the 1996 federal welfare legislation: Like states, reservations also experienced a decline in the number of households and individuals (13 percent change) receiving TANF from January 1995 to January 1998 (see table 2), but for reservations the rate of decline was less rapid. During the same period, households and individuals among non-reservation TANF recipients within Arizona declined by 44 percent while the state of Arizona, which includes reservation and non-reservation TANF recipients, experienced a decline of 41 percent.

With regards to sanctions, some families on reservations in Arizona have experienced sanctions (see table 3). Between January of 1998 and January of 1999, 623 cases or 9.03 percent of Arizona's total reservation based TANF cases (as of January 1998) were sanctioned 25 percent, indicating that these cases lost 25 percent of their cash assistance. During the same time, a total of 517 cases (7.50 percent) were sanctioned 50 percent, losing 50 percent of their cash benefit while 382 cases (5.54 percent) were closed due to sanctions resulting in a 100 percent loss of the cash benefit.

With regards to time limit, the state of Arizona waived the two-year EMPOWER time limit for all reservations with 50 percent or higher proportion of adults not employed.[4] As a result, a very small proportion of the TANF recipients (193 adult recipients) from reservations has been removed from the TANF program due to a two-year EMPOWER time limit between January of 1998 and January of 1999 (see table 3) These recipients (193 adult recipients) make up less than one percent of the total TANF recipients on reservations as of January 1998. Ninety percent of these recipients were from reservations that were ineligible for a two-year EMPOWER time limit waiver (i e., these reservations had at least 50 percent adults employed). The remaining 10 percent of recipients were from reservations that were eligible for a waiver (i.e., these reservations had less than 50 percent adults employed).

5. Barriers to employment: American Indian families with children on reservations experience employment barriers similar to those of their counterparts across the country. These are: a shortage of employment opportunities at the lower rungs of the economic order, a lack of transportation and childcare facilities, and low levels of education and job experience. Preliminary evidence suggests that these barriers are magnified on reservations. Poor families in Indian communities face additional barriers to employment because of their geographic isolation, lack of access to basic necessities (like telephones), individual and family problems, and stereotypes and discrimination by employers due to gender issues, ethnicity, or personal/family histories.

6. Families' survival strategies: Since Arizona began implementing its version of welfare reform in 1995, there has been evidence of increased efforts to participate in work and training activities by former and current welfare recipients. Waiting lists for job training and childcare programs have increased over the last two years. There is also evidence that families are living under extreme financial hardship--lacking the ability to purchase basic household supplies including food, fuel and clothing.

[4] The state of Arizona used the Bureau of Indian Affairs' 1995 estimate of the percentage of adult American Indians on reservations that are not employed to waive two-year EMPOWER time limit.

OVERVIEW

This study is aimed at monitoring the impact of the 1996 federal welfare legislation on American Indian families with children on reservations within the state of Arizona over five years (1997-2002). Our goal is to inform the public policy debate on how to improve the social and economic opportunities for low-income families with children on reservations. This report is based on our first year (October 1, 1997-September 30,1998) of work, which focused on aspects of reform implementation and short-term and potential long-term outcomes. We analyzed secondary data from administrative sources relevant to the implementation of welfare legislation in Indian communities. In addition, we collected and analyzed primary (qualitative) data regarding welfare reform options implemented on reservations and their potential impacts. Primary data were collected from in-depth telephone interviews with service providers of 15 of the 21 reservations in Arizona. This information was substantiated by two site visits to three reservations where we conducted focus groups with current and former welfare recipients and state and tribal social service providers.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Early feedback on the effects of the 1996 federal welfare legislation supports the following conclusions:

1. Increased Legislation Granting Tribes Authority to Self-Administer Welfare Policies and Services: Recent federal legislation (including the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996, P.L. 104-193) has granted more independence and flexibility to tribes to design and implement their own social service programs on reservations. There is much interest among tribes in Arizona, as well as in tribes in other states, to utilize this new option and exercise authority over the administration of TANF. Nationally, as of January 1999, 22 Indian Tribal Organizations had submitted their own tribal TANF administration plans to the DHHS. So far, the DHHS has approved the plans of 19 Indian Tribal Organizations. In comparison with other Indian communities, the Indian communities with approved plans are generally smaller and have lower levels of unemployment. Three of the 19 Indian Tribal Organizations with approved Plans are in Arizona. Several other Arizona tribes expect to have a self-administration plan developed within the next few years. Tribes that have elected to stay with the state-administered TANF program are either gathering information so they may position themselves to self-administer TANF, or are disinterested as they are nearly "welfare independent" and have very few TANF households. These tribes have either employment opportunities (due to economic development opportunities within or near reservations) or tribal per capita payments, which disqualify families for receipt of other welfare assistance (e.g., TANF, Tribal General Assistance).

2. Limitations of the 1996 Federal Welfare Legislation on Tribal Administration of TANF: The option for tribes to administer their own TANF programs has been praised as an example of the "government-to-government" relationship between tribes and the federal government. However, as tribes begin to develop plans for self-administration of TANF programs, they are also noticing the legislation's limitations. For instance, the 1996 federal welfare legislation fails to treat them on par with the states. This is especially evident in three areas· unexpended TANF funds, funds to evaluate their performance, and federal rewards for "successful" work. In the first area, unexpended TANF funds, states are allowed to keep these funds for future (unlimited time) use, but tribes must return any unexpended federal funds to the federal government within two years. In regards to the second area, performance evaluation funds, states receive additional money to evaluate their performance, whereas tribes that implement TANF independently do not receive evaluation money. Finally, with respect to the third area, federal rewards for "successful" work, states receive incentives for reducing caseloads, unwed births and teen pregnancies, whereas tribes do not receive any incentives, even when they are able to make reductions in the same areas. Also noteworthy is that tribes administering their own TANF programs may not receive state matching funds, support costs and start-up money. As such, tribal leaders and service providers are concerned that devolution of responsibility for TANF administration without commensurate allocation of financial resources to the tribes may render the policy ineffective. Currently, we are aware of only nine states in the nation that have agreed to provide state matching funds to tribes that administer their own TANF services. It is important to note that, 13 of the 19 Indian communities that are currently self-administering TANF come from these nine states that provide matching funds. This evidence underscores the importance of providing matching funds to expedite tribal takeover of TANF programs.

3. The 1996 Federal Welfare Legislation's Impact on Enhancing Organizational Coordination, Communication and Collaboration: According to state and tribal social service administrators, under the 1996 welfare legislation, both states and tribes find it advantageous to enter into intergovernmental agreements to ensure the coordination and provision of TANF and related services. The legislation has strengthened coordination, communication and collaboration at all levels--among tribal social service providers, between tribes, tribes and states, and tribes and the federal government--that are interested in examining issues around TANF implementation on reservations. At the tribal level, for instance, coordination, collaboration, and communication have increased between staff of social services, employment training, childcare, education and other departments. An increase in coordination, communication, and collaboration is a positive early effect of TANF legislation and may improve the tribe's efforts to serve families with children in need in the future.

4. Changes at the Community Level Under the 1996 Federal Welfare Legislation: Like states, reservations also experienced a decline in the number of households and individuals (13 percent change) receiving TANF from January 1995 to January 1998, but for reservations the rate of decline was less rapid. During the same period, households and individuals among non-reservation TANF recipients within Arizona declined by 44 percent while the state of Arizona, which includes reservation and non-reservation TANF recipients, experienced a decline of 41 percent. With regards to sanctions, some families on reservations in Arizona have experienced sanctions, losing 25 percent to 100 percent of their cash benefit. With regards to time limit, a very small proportion of the TANF recipients from reservations has been removed from the TANF program due to a two-year EMPOWER time limit between January of 1998 and January of 1999.

5. Barriers to Employment: American Indian families with children on reservations experience similar barriers when trying to move from welfare to work as do their counterparts across the country. These are: a shortage of employment opportunities at the lower rungs of the economic order, a lack of transportation and childcare facilities, and low levels of education and job experience. These barriers are magnified on reservations. Poor families in Indian communities face additional barriers to employment because of their geographic isolation, lack of access to basic necessities (like telephones), individual and family problems, and stereotypes and discrimination by employers due to gender issues, ethnicity, or personal/family histories.

6. Survival Strategies of Families: Since Arizona began implementing its version of welfare reform in 1995, there has been evidence of increased efforts to participate in work and training activities by former and current welfare recipients. Waiting lists for job training and childcare programs have increased over the last two years. There is also evidence that families are living under extreme financial hardship--lacking the ability to purchase basic household supplies including food, fuel and clothing.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES (TANF) ON AMERICAN INDIAN RESERVATIONS: EARLY EVIDENCE FROM ARIZONA

I. INTRODUCTION

The Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act (PRWORA) of 1996 (Public Law 104-193) brought an end to Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) as an entitlement to individuals. The PRWORA reflects the public sentiment that the able-bodied poor who are of working age should change their reproductive and parenting behavior in order to engage in productive employment. The 1996 federal welfare legislation replaced AFDC, emergency assistance, and the Job Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS) programs[1] with the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) block grant. According to this law, adults can receive cash assistance for a maximum of five[2] cumulative years in their lifetimes[3] (or less at state option) and must start working[4] after two years of receiving assistance. States may require participants to begin community service as early as after two months on public assistance. The law also requires that states put 40 percent (50 percent by FY 2002) of single parents receiving cash assistance in work programs for at least 30 hours per week[5] by FY 2000.

States can opt for a shorter lifetime limit and demand more stringent work requirements, but they must not be less stringent than the federal requirements. All states were required to begin the implementation of the new law by July 1, 1997. The state of Arizona received a waiver from the federal government and began implementing its version of welfare reform, the EMPOWER (Employing and Moving People Off Welfare and Encouraging Responsibility) program, as part of its TANF block grant on November 1, 1995. Also, Arizona has opted to provide benefits to adults for a maximum of 24 months within the first 60 months and to waive the 24-month time limit for adults residing on reservations with 50 percent or higher

[1] However, JOBS funding will continue (under the Native Employment Works JOBS program) on American Indian reservations where JOBS programs have previously been administered.

[2] The PRWORA of 1996 has exempted adults residing on reservations with populations of at least 1,000 and unemployment rates of at least 50 percent from the five-year life time limit. The federal Balanced Budget Act, passed on August 5, 1997, has modified the PRWORA of 1996 by removing the requirement of "population of at least 1,000" and has exempted adults residing on reservations of any size with 50 percent or higher unemployment rates from the five-year life time limit (The U.S. Congress, 1997).

[3] States may exempt up to 20% of their caseloads from the five-year life time benefit limitation in addition to the five-year benefit limitation exemption of American Indians residing on reservations with 50 percent or higher unemployment rates.

[4] Work activities recognized under the legislation include subsidized and unsubsidized employment, community service, job search and job readiness program participation, jobs skills training, on-the-job training, secondary school education, and vocational education for up to 12 months.

[5] Twenty hours per week for single parents with a child under age six unemployment rates.[6] While Arizona continues to use the required 60-month lifetime limit, an adult recipient has to collect these benefits over a period of at least 11 years (a maximum of 24 months of benefit within the first five years, 24 months of benefits in the following five years and 12 months of benefits in the 11th or last year).

According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (1998) welfare caseloads have dropped dramatically both nationally and at the state level (see Tables 1-3). Under the 1996 federal welfare legislation, states can sanction adults who do not comply with TANF requirements and drop them off the welfare rolls at any time. Across the U.S., TANF caseloads have been dropping not solely as a result of people finding work, but also due to noncompliance with welfare requirements. The Washington Post reports that "in some states, sanctions have become a significant part of declining caseloads. More than half of the 14,248 cases closed in Indiana in a three-month period last year, for example, were a result not of people finding work but of sanctions" (Vobejda & Havemann, March 23, 1998, p. A01). The same Washington Post article reports that of the 148,000 Florida cases closed in the second half of 1997, 27 percent were closed due to sanctions (Vobejda & Havemann, March 23, 1998, p. A01). In Arizona, sanctions may be imposed for TANF recipients who fail to comply with certain program requirements, which for adults who receive assistance, include the following: active pursuance of employment (e.g. sending out at least three job applications per month and obtaining at least three signatures from the potential employers contacted through the applications; enrollment of children in school; and up-to-date immunizations of children. TANF recipients must also be cooperative in the process of establishing paternity for their children. In addition, an adult TANF recipient must show up for appointments with his/her Department of Economic Security caseworker. Failure to comply with any of these requirements may result in sanctions.

Aside from the issue of sanctions, diminishing welfare caseloads in Arizona are attributable to ineligibility. For instance, a teenage mother living without an adult family member in the house, children born while the mother is on welfare, and individuals with criminal records (those convicted after 1985, drug abusers and those fleeing prosecution) are ineligible for TANF. In essence, the 1996 federal welfare legislation, and its implementation in the state of Arizona, emphasizes changes in personal and work behavior, parenting behavior, and the reproductive behavior of adult recipients.

Another dimension of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act (PRWORA) of 1996 is that Section 412 of this legislation has bestowed power upon Tribal Governments that wish to administer their own public assistance programs (U.S. Congress, 1996). The legislation authorizes the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) to provide direct funding to tribes intending to design and implement their own TANF services. Under the 1996 legislation, tribes can negotiate directly with the Secretary of the DHHS in order to design and implement TANF services to fit their own unique conditions. Many tribes see this as an opportunity to protect tribal families with children by shifting the focus of social services from temporary and rehabilitative to long-term and development-oriented. As a result, there is a growing interest among tribes to administer TANF services on their own instead of allowing states to administer the services on reservations. Still, the impact of the 1996 welfare legislation on families with children is likely to vary depending upon who administers the services—the state or the tribe

Arizona is home to 21 reservations[7] of which, according to the 1990 census, one reservation (Quechan Tribe) owns land in Arizona but no Native Americans reside in Arizona portion of the reservation. In Arizona, as in other states, American Indian communities vary tremendously in terms of size, extent of geographic isolation, availability of economic opportunities, levels of welfare dependency, and structure of available social services. For instance, some reservations have better employment opportunities on or near their reservations (with few residents receiving welfare), whereas others are not only geographically isolated, but also economically depressed (i.e. very high poverty rates). Due to these differences, the impact of the 1996 welfare legislation on families with children will vary significantly by reservation and must be tracked over an extended period of time. Also, because the 1996 federal welfare legislation is aimed at changing behavior and attitudes of people, only a longitudinal study can document whether or not the law will meet this goal. As such, the aim of this study is to monitor the impacts of welfare reform on both families with children and the delivery of social services on reservations in the state of Arizona, over a period of five years (September 1997-August, 2002). In the end, our study seeks to estimate the downstream effects of the 1996 federal welfare legislation and inform the public policy debate on how to improve social and economic opportunities for low-income families with children on reservations.

Our study focuses on the following research questions:

1. What are the demographic, social, and economic characteristics of American Indian families with children who are current or former welfare recipients? How are noncompliants (sanctioned parents) different or similar to former or current welfare recipients?

2 To what extent are current or former welfare recipients receiving public assistance in areas like child care, health care, and transportation, and how does this assistance affect parents' participation in work activities or in education and training programs?

3. What are the characteristics of recipients who find work, and what is the nature of that work?

[7]The 21 reservations are as follows: Ak-Chin Indian Community, Maricopa; Cocopah Tribe, Somerton; Colorado River Tribe, Parker; Fort McDowell Indian Community, Fountain Hills; Fort Mojave Tribe, Needles, CA: Gila River Indian Community, Sacaton; Havasupai Tribe, Supai; Hopi Tribe, Kykotsmovi, Second Mesa; Hualapai Tribe, Peach Springs; Kaibab-Paiute Tribe, Fredonia; Navajo Nation, Window Rock; Pascua Yaqui Tribe, Tucson; Quechan Tribe, Yuma; Salt River Puma Maricopa Indian Community, Scottsdale; San Carlos Apache Tribe, San Carlos; San Juan Southern Paiute Tribe, Tuba City; Tonto Apache Tribe of Payson; Tohono O' Odham, Nation Sells; White Mountain Apache Tribe, White River; Yavapai Apache Tribe, Camp Verde; and Yavapi-Prescott Indian Community, Prescott.

4. What is the range of basic and job-related skills of American Indian parents who are current or former welfare recipients? What type of employment and training related programs are currently available to them (e.g., Native Employment Works JOBS programs)? How relevant are these training programs to providing the skills required in job markets on or near reservations?

5. What are the reservation-based or individual-level barriers to raising the skills and employment potential of American Indian parents who are current or former welfare recipients?

6. How have Tribal Councils prepared themselves to face the consequences of welfare reform? As for those tribes who plan to administer TANF independently, how have they positioned themselves to undertake a task of this magnitude? What sort of administrative and evaluative infrastructures do they have in place? How will they coordinate with the state and other service providers in determining Medicaid and Food Stamp eligibility, and in ensuring child support enforcement, job creation, and job development?

7. Will the benefits and outcomes for families vary significantly depending upon whether a tribe participates in a state program or administers its own plan? What measures will the state of Arizona undertake to ensure equitable access of eligible tribal residents to services under the state's TANF block grant?

8. What strategies are parents, whom are sanctioned or impacted by time limits and work requirements, using to attain economic independence? Do they change their strategies over time?

9. How will other tribal support programs be affected by TANF? What proportion of the population losing TANF eligibility will shift to tribal General Assistance programs? How will changes in Medicaid eligibility affect service provision by the Indian Health Service? What other changes will occur in the next five years in the provision of social services at the tribal level?

10. How will the social and economic conditions on reservations change as welfare reform progresses? Will rates of social problems like poverty, malnutrition, crime, child abuse and neglect, addictions, and teen pregnancy go up in the next five years, and if so, by how much?

Because reservations are often geographically isolated (Sandefur & Scott, 1983) and economic opportunities on reservations are limited (Vinje, 1996), the impact of the new welfare policy on families with children living on reservations requires close monitoring. Through a series of academic reports and articles over a period of five years, we expect to document the unique impacts of the 1996 welfare legislation on reservations. This report is the result of our first year of study (October 1, 1997-September 30, 1998) in which we performed the following:

1. Reviewed the social and economic conditions of reservation-based American Indian communities.

2. Reviewed the history of welfare policies in American Indian communities.

3. Presented qualitative data from interviews with service providers and current or former welfare recipients regarding the impacts of welfare reform. This data addresses the following questions:

   a. What is the response of tribes to the devolution of authority to administer TANF services from federal and state governments to Tribal Governments?
   b. How have Tribal Councils prepared themselves to face the consequences of the 1996 federal welfare legislation?
   c How have tribes who plan to administer TANF services positioned themselves to undertake a task of this magnitude?
   d. What are the barriers to tribal administration of TANF services? How can these barriers be reduced?
   e. How are tribal women with children preparing themselves to face the consequences of welfare reform?
   f. What are short-term and potential long-term outcomes of reform implementation on families with children on reservations?
   g. What are the reservation-based or individual-level barriers to increasing the skills and employment potential of American Indian parents who are current or former welfare recipients?

II. SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC CONDITIONS OF AMERICAN INDIAN COMMUNITIES

Most reservation-based families with children are economically vulnerable. While unemployment rates have fallen to their lowest levels across the country, poverty and unemployment rates in many Indian communities in Arizona remain high. This suggests that residents of reservations are untouched or isolated from national and regional economic upturns.

The vulnerability of American Indians is a product of several factors: geographic isolation of reservations (Sandefur & Scott, 1983), limited economic opportunities on reservations (Vinje, 1996), low levels of human capital (in the form of health, mental health, education and work experience), growth in the number of single parent (female-headed) families, lack of adequate support programs, and reductions in public assistance. Nationally, 41 percent of the poor are children under the age of 18 (Blank, 1997). On reservations this figure is higher, due in part to higher fertility rates on reservations (Hodgkinson, 1990) and higher levels of overall poverty (U.S. Department of Commerce, 1993). In 1990, 55 percent of the children living on reservations lived below the poverty level (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990). Compared to a national birthrate of 15.6 per 1,000 population in 1986, American Indians had a birthrate of 27.5 per 1,000 population, with fertility rates reaching their highest levels on reservations (Hodgkinson, 1990). In terms of poverty, both the 1980 and 1990 Censuses indicate that the poverty rate for American Indians is considerably higher than that of the total population. For example, in 1989, 31 percent of American Indians both on and off reservations lived below the poverty level, compared to 13 percent of the total U.S. population (Paisano, 1990). On reservations, poverty is even more prevalent. In 1990, 51 percent of reservation residents lived below the poverty level (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990).

Higher rates of poverty are especially evident for female-headed families, and these families are more prevalent among American Indians than among the U.S. population overall. For example, in 1990, 27 percent of American Indian families both on and off reservations were headed by a female householder compared to a national figure of 17 percent (U.S. Department of Commerce, 1993; U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990). Single-parent families are more likely to be poor; this is especially true for American Indian families. In 1989, 50 percent of American Indian families maintained by females with no husband present lived in poverty, compared to 31 percent of all families maintained by women without husbands in the U.S. (U.S. Department of Commerce, 1993). The median income in 1990 for American Indian families headed by women was only $10,742, or 62 percent of the median income ($17,414) for all families headed by women without husbands in the U.S. (U.S. Department of Commerce, 1993). On reservations, the 1989 median income for year-round, full-time female workers was $14,800, but the median income for all females with any income (ages 15 and over) was only $5,308 (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990). Of 30,953 female-headed households on American Indian reservations, 55 percent have an income of less than $10,000.

In general, most families on public assistance have low levels of human capital and experience other personal and family problems, such as substance abuse, or having children with chronic medical conditions or serious disabilities (Olson & Pavetti, 1996). These barriers to employment also apply to American Indian families with children on reservations. In terms of human capital, the educational attainment levels of American Indians lag far behind those of the overall population. In 1990, 66 percent of American Indians 25 years old and over were high school graduates (but on reservations this number was reduced to 53.8 percent), compared to 75 percent of the total population. American Indians were also less likely than the entire U.S. population to complete a bachelor's degree or higher, with nine percent of American Indians earning four-year degrees (but on reservations this number was reduced to 3.9 percent) compared to 20 percent of the total population (Paisano, 1990). Census data indicate that 46 percent of females (aged 25 and over) residing on reservations in 1990 had less than a high school diploma (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990). Moreover, many who live on reservations are often less prepared for the labor force because they lack job-related skills and training. Other barriers to their economic success are a lack of adequate technology and support programs (such as telephones, child care, health care, and transportation), which is due, in part, to the geographic isolation of reservations and other tribal lands (Sandefur & Scott, 1983). According to the 1990 Census, 34 percent of households on reservations lacked telephones, while 17 percent lacked access to a working vehicle (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990). Lack of vehicles and phones increases the difficulty of finding work because on the one hand, a lack of communication and transportation hinders job-searching efforts by potential employees, and on the other hand, employers are reluctant to hire individuals without these basic amenities. Although economic opportunities are more favorable in urban areas, moving to these areas may mean the loss of cultural identification and social support, as well as the loss of services available on reservations (Shumway & Jackson, 1995). If American Indians then, cannot gain employment due to a lack of resources (phone or vehicle), or because of fear of the loss of cultural support and identification, their choices are limited to available jobs on tribal land, which vary by number and type from reservation to reservation. Most employment opportunities available on reservations are created within Tribal Governments, the service sector and retail. A few tribes have development activities (gaming and recreational activities such as holiday resorts). Even on reservations with employment opportunities though, the available work is generally not substantial enough to employ an entire tribe. Thus, if American Indians cannot gain employment on or off reservations, fulfilling TANF work requirements is impossible and sanctions are inevitable.

Most of the public assistance recipients who are directly impacted by TANF (required to enter the labor force) are women. For example, of the 6,664 TANF recipients in the state of Arizona who were slated to be impacted by time limits[8], 98 percent were women (Arizona Department of Economic Security, 1997). In terms of work force participation, American Indian women have a slightly lower labor force participation rate (55 percent) than the general population of American women (57 percent) (U.S. Department of Commerce, 1993). Employment rates overall, in tandem with employment opportunities, vary by reservation. For example, on reservations in the state of Arizona in 1990, unemployment rates ranged from 35 percent at the White Mountain Apache reservation to 10 percent at the Yavapai-Prescott reservation (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990). Nationally, the unemployment rates on reservations averaged 26 percent (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990).

Because of high unemployment on many Indian reservations, public assistance may be a more dependable source of income for residents than employment (Cebula & Belton, 1994). Cebula and Belton (1994) found that Native Americans' migration decisions are influenced by geographic public assistance differentials (Cebula & Belton, 1994). Considering the impacts of high unemployment, higher fertility rates, and the younger median age of the American Indian population on reservations (which is 22 years, compared to the median age of 33 for the total U.S. population) (U.S. Department of Commerce, 1993), it is reasonable to expect that a higher proportion of single parent (mostly female-headed) families with children on reservations rely on public assistance. On Arizona reservations alone, 43,406 individuals,[9] the majority of which are children, received AFDC benefits, and 62,292 individuals received Food Stamps in 1994 (Inter Tribal Council of Arizona, 1997). Nationally, approximately 23 percent of households on reservations receive some form of public assistance (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1990). Therefore, since single parent families, the majority of which are female-headed, are already subjected to higher rates of poverty, it is reasonable to expect that American Indian women with children who live on reservations will be more severely impacted by the 1996 welfare reform legislation than any other racial or ethnic group in the U.S.

III. A HISTORICAL OVERVIEW OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF SOCIAL SERVICES TO AMERICAN INDIANS

A discussion on the current administration of social services for American Indians requires an understanding of the historical relationship between the Indian Nations and the U.S. government. American Indians are different from other U.S. citizens in that they have citizenship status with the federal and state governments, yet as tribal members they also have a unique federal-Indian relationship ("federal trust responsibility") based upon treaties, acts of Congress, and presidential directives, which recognize tribes as sovereign entities. This dual relationship complicates policy making for American Indian social services .

Prior to the 1920s, social services for American Indians were based solely on their trust relationship with the federal government. In 1924, American Indians were granted U.S. citizenship, and as they became citizens of the states in which they resided, they became entitled to general services provided for other citizens of the state. However, since the U.S. Constitution explicitly granted authority for the responsibility of the American Indians to the federal government, states did not view Indians as their responsibility and historically have often denied them rights to state-administered services. Due, then, to this unsteady and highly complex relationship between the federal government, the states and the Indian Nations, an historical perspective is important. Through an historical perspective, one can appreciate the current situation American Indians and tribal governments face regarding the administration and delivery of public assistance and social services.

A. Destruction of Tribal Social Service Systems

Early relations between the United States government and the American Indian Nations were based on treaties that recognized and respected tribes as sovereign nations. Federal assistance consisted of goods and services offered in exchange for land and friendship. These goods and services included clothing, farming equipment, technology and educational services. This early relationship between sovereign nations and the United States government came to an end as the American Army was strengthened and the colonialists' need for allies and friendship was thereby reduced. The end of the treaty period resulted in a change in perspective towards American Indians and in a simultaneous effort to assimilate them into the dominant Western culture. In 1832, Chief Justice John Marshall declared American Indian tribes as sovereign nations who were nonetheless under the "superior power from the federal government" (Deloria and Lytle, 1983 p. 4).

Fear of losing of land and culture led the Indian Nations to cede large tracts of land formerly occupied by them in return for land specifically reserved for them (reservations). Indians agreed to occupy reservations in an effort to isolate themselves from the encroaching Western culture. Essentially, they ceded land in exchange for a promise of protection of their new land, as well as to preserve the remains of a tribal existence that depended, in part, on that land.

Although American Indians had bargained for their own legally recognized land, reservation life was, in fact, traumatic for Indian culture The traditional survival strategies of American Indians were ill suited for the lands on which the U.S. government placed American Indians. For example, the Shawnee Tribe was placed on the arid plains of Kansas even though they were forest dwellers; the Cherokees, traditionally from the Smokey Mountains, were placed in Oklahoma (O'Brien, 1989). The disruption of survival techniques that followed from the displacement of tribes devastated the traditional social networks of American Indians. Tribal members traditionally relied on other members, as well as on family, in times of need. The reservation setting changed this dynamic, forcing tribal members to rely on outside forces for help. Because reservations did not provide adequate resources for self-sufficiency, tribes became dependent on the federal government for food, education, clothing, shelter, health care, and other services. This period in Indian history marked the beginning of food rations, surplus food supplies from army forts, provided by the U.S. government. During this same period, the federal government expanded the number of off-reservation boarding schools, removing American Indian children from their families. Thus, education, through off-reservation boarding schools, became a major initiative of the federal government. The objective of the U.S. was to control and assimilate Indians. The assimilation of Indians was facilitated by transferring responsibility for the provision of social services (i.e., food, clothing and shelter) from the tribes to the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA).

In 1887, the U.S. government, in another attempt to assimilate American Indians into the dominant culture, began a land allotment program, offering land to individual American Indian families. This program resulted in a reduction of American Indian owned land, as well as in a continuing pattern of weakening Tribal Governments. Once situated on land acquired through the land allotment program, Indian families were not provided with the technology required to farm. Not only was the lack of technology a problem for Indian families, but they were also unaccustomed to the notion of private property. Since owning and farming land were unfamiliar to American Indians, many of the families eventually sold the land allotted to them. As a result of the land allotment program, American Indians lost two thirds of their 150 million acres of land (Tyler, 1973). With the loss of land and disruption of tribal life, the dwindling authority of Tribal Governments was inevitable. The structure of the program was such that the BIA provided goods and services directly to individual Indian families, ignoring existing tribal governmental structures. This period was extremely destructive to the American Indian way of life, creating a landless group of poor Indians, and increasing American Indians' dependency on the federal government for goods and services.

The plight of the American Indians led Congress to call for assistance in the form of emergency food and shelter. Through the early 1900's, the services of the BIA were expanded. Due to this dependency of tribes on the federal government, during this period, American Indians were not viewed as citizens but "wards" of the federal government.

B. Federal Reconciliation and the Development of New Social Service Programs

The increased provision of federal social services for American Indians was not explicitly explained in U.S. law. The role of the BIA in the provision of social services was determined under a variety of treaties and acts, and each reservation had different sources of funds. The lack of a uniform policy for American Indian social services created confusion about the role of the BIA. This ambiguity changed in 1921 with the Snyder Act, which placed all federal Indian services under the BIA. This act "institutionalized" social services for American Indians and became the basis for the provision of all social, health, and educational services for the Indian Nations.

Even with the provision of increased services though, American Indians were not granted even the basic right of citizenship. Instead, the right to citizenship was not acquired until after American Indians voluntarily participated in World War I. Rewarding the American Indians for their participation, in 1924 the U.S. government granted them citizenship (Tyler, 1973; O'Brien, 1989). Gaining citizenship placed American Indians under the rights of the 14th Amendment.

They were considered citizens of the state in which they resided; and thus, they were allowed the right to the same social services as other state citizens. Historically, states have been reluctant to recognize that American Indians, as state citizens, have rights to certain benefits. This reluctance was due to the traditional federal responsibility for dealing with the Indians, the location of many governmental functions at the state level, and the constantly changing polices regarding the individual status of American Indians (Deloria and Lytle, 1983). However, the granting of citizenship did not necessarily improve conditions for American Indians. That is, though American Indian were legally considered citizens of the states in which they resided, states did not readily acknowledge this right and continued to view them as outcasts.

It was not until 1954 that the courts finally enforced tribal member rights as "equal to those enjoyed by all other citizens and residents of the state" (Deloria and Lytle, 1983, p. 245). Today, American Indians residing on or off reservations are as eligible as other state residents to receive state social services, as long as they meet the eligibility requirements. Even still, the relationship between the Tribal Governments, their members and their respective states, is not perfect; many Tribal Governments and their members continue to meet with political resistance from states.

Structural reform of federal funding as a result of the Snyder Act of 1921 and the granting of citizenship did not radically improve the situation of American Indians. Out of concern for the American Indian situation, the Meriam Commission of 1928 reported on the deplorable social conditions of American Indians and the inadequacy of government programs to address their conditions. Specifically, the Meriam Report admitted the failure of the land allotment program and reported that the BIA control on reservations prevented Indians from attaining self-sufficiency (Deloria and Lytle, 1983). This report led to the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, which reestablished the rights of American Indians to their own governments. This act formally ended the allotment program, prevented the transfer of land to anyone but the tribe itself, allowed Tribal Councils to negotiate directly with the federal, state and local governments, and reduced the power of the BIA. The act also enabled the development of Tribal Governments by providing official tribal recognition, increasing services and funding, and creating an economic development program specifically for tribes. From this point forward, Tribal Governments began developing public work programs in health, education and welfare.

With the onset of World War II, American Indians, once again, were willing to protect America. In contrast to the honor and respect received after their contributions to World War I however, American Indians returned home to dilapidated reservations after WWII. There were no jobs, no financial assistance, and few educational services available to them. The federal government decided to deal with Indians as they did with poor rural residents: they relocated them to urban areas to find employment. Through this Indian Relocation Program, Indians who wished to seek employment opportunities away from the reservation were assisted with financial support and job placement services. The federal government wanted to cut back on special social service programs for American Indians and to incorporate them into the social programs for other citizens. As part of this initiative, the federal government passed legislation in 1953 both to terminate the federal trust responsibility for those tribes qualified to manage their own affairs and to facilitate the transition of full jurisdiction over tribes to the states (Tyler, 1973). American Indians did not tolerate this solution, however, and, eventually, through a strongly organized coalition of Tribal Governments, were able to successfully work for the repeal of this legislation. In essence, it was decided that the federal government had a responsibility to reservations and could not, as a policy solution, relocate American Indians to urban areas or abolish the social programs created specifically for them.

C. Impact of Indian Self-Determination on Tribal Social Services

The Civil Rights movement of the 1960s paved the way for the introduction of self-determination as a major goal of Indian policy and increased federal funding for tribal social services. With this renewed recognition of Indian reservations as governmental entities, tribes became eligible for a variety of programs, not as beneficiaries of the federal government's trust responsibility, but as political units with the same eligibility for funding as state and local governments. As such, Indian Nations began receiving direct funding from a variety of government agencies. The Department of Health and Human Services was responsible for health care; the Department of Commerce was responsible for economic development; the Department of Housing and Urban Development provided housing grants, and the Department of Labor provided job-training grants (O'Brien, 1989). At the same time, American Indians, as U.S. citizens, were eligible for services from other social welfare programs, including Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), Food Stamps, and Medicaid. Thus, the role of the BIA changed from sole provider of social services to "provider of last resort," assisting only those American Indians not eligible for aid from the state or local government (Taylor, 1984)

The "Great Society" programs, such as Food Stamps and Medicaid (mentioned above), had the purpose of strengthening the reservations economically, governmentally, and socially. Additional legislation created to this end included the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, the Vocation Education Act, the Higher Education Act, and the Economic Opportunity Act (Taylor, 1984). During the 1970s, the number of federal programs and funds directed to Tribal Governments dramatically increased. A review of a 1991 report by the Congressional Research Service revealed that eleven federal departments funded approximately 198 different programs and services for which American Indian governments could apply.

Another way to study shifts in federal programs and funds directed towards Tribal Governments, is to focus on presidential administrations. For example, the Johnson and Nixon administrations both supported policy initiatives which aimed to improve the quality of reservation life without diminishing the powers of tribal governments. As part of these initiatives, Congress passed the Indian Self-Determination Act in 1975. This act confirmed the federal government's commitment to transferring administrative control of services to Indian Nations through the contracting of BIA-administered services to the tribes. The act also supported tribal autonomy by allowing tribes to tailor their social service programs to the unique needs and special circumstances of their communities (Walke, 1991). Also during this period, the Indian Child Welfare Act and the Health Care Improvement Act were passed. Like the policy initiatives and other acts mentioned, these acts were enacted with the intention of improving reservation life while recognizing tribal autonomy (O'Brien, 1989).

Like the Johnson and Nixon administrations, the Reagan administration encouraged tribal autonomy. To do so, the Reagan administration supported federally administered block grants. However, the results of the block grants were contradictory. That is, while block grants gave tribal and state governments more autonomy, they also led to decreased funding for social and economic programs. In examining federal expenditures in terms of constant dollars, from 1981 to 1988, Stuart (1990) found a negative 34 percent change in Indian Education grants and a 28 percent decline in job training expenditures. Undoubtedly, these reductions in spending have impacted American Indian parents of young children (as well as the overall population) living on Indian reservations. This decline in federal program monies correlates with the rate of labor force participation on reservations, which declined from 67 percent of the working age population in 1980 to 53 percent in 1990 (Vinje, 1996).

In more recent years, the Bush and Clinton administrations have also impacted American Indian life. Following the Reagan administration, the Bush administration strengthened policies which fostered Indian self-governance through the development of a self-governance compact, which allowed for block grants of existing BIA and Indian Health Services funds to tribal governments. The Clinton administration has further strengthened the "government to government" relationship with tribes by maintaining support for the development of self-governance compacts. In general, the self-governance compacts have allowed tribes greater flexibility in designing programs to meet the needs of tribal members.

D. Current Tribal Administration of Social Services

Currently, tribal governments administer a variety of social service programs through various funding structures. Federal funding for these programs is channeled to tribal governments through two basic conduits : 1) direct federal funding to tribes, which includes self-determination contracts (e.g. General Assistance), block grants (e.g. Child Care Development), and special initiative grants (e.g. Domestic Violence); and 2) federal funds channeled to the state and "passed through" to tribal governments via state/tribal agreements (e.g. Title IV-E Foster Care).

As tribal governments have labored to accommodate these various funding structures, the common approach has been to view the different funding streams as individual "program" funds and to develop independent administrative structures for each funding source. The individualization of funds has resulted in the creation of a complex web of bureaucratic regulations and reporting requirements at the tribal level. The complexity of the current system is underscored by the sheer number of funding sources for different programs. For instance, funding for employment and training programs comes from a variety of departments: the Job Training Partnership Act and Welfare to Work services funded by the Department of Labor; the Native Employment Works Job Opportunity and Basic Skill (NEW JOBS) initiative funded by the Department of Health and Human Services; and the Tribal Work Experience and Employment Assistance Program funded by the Department of Interior. Funding sources for assistance to families and children include the Department of Interior (which funds General Assistance), the Department of Agriculture (which administers Commodity Food Distribution), and the Department of Health and Human Services (which funds childcare services). All of the above funding sources dictate different service regulations and reporting requirements.

E. Legislation Granting Tribal Independence and Strengthening State-Tribal Relationships

Critics of Tribal Governments have stated that, as presently funded and organized, tribal programs are not structured to provide responsive and efficient services capable of meeting the social and economic needs of their communities (O'Brien, 1989). Tribal Governments, as well as their state counterparts, will face a major challenge in adapting their programs and funding patterns to accommodate the recent welfare reform legislation. Although state governments have historically tried to exert control over tribal communities and have resisted providing social services to tribal members, several pieces of federal legislation, in addition to Section 412 of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-193), have granted more independence to tribes to design and implement social service programs on reservations. Under these laws, both states and tribes may find it advantageous to enter into intergovernmental agreements to ensure the coordination and provision of TANF and related services. These laws are briefly discussed below.

1. The 1992 Indian Employment, Training, and Related Services Demonstration Act (P.L. 102-477) was intended to reduce paperwork and other administrative burdens placed upon Tribal Governments. Under this legislation, Tribal Governments may develop one plan to obtain funds from multiple federal agencies for the provision of a range of employment and job training services. Simply put, they may combine the grants they receive into one funding stream. Also, under P.L. 102-477, tribes may write one financial report reflecting the entire budget and are only required to report to a single federal agency, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA). Then, under this legislation, responsibility for the disbursement of reports falls to the BIA, which shares the reports with other federal agencies. Programs that can be combined under P.L 102-477 are JTPA-IV-A, Summer Youth Program-II-B and Welfare to Work from the Department of Labor; NEW JOBS, the Child Care Development Fund and TANF from the Department of Health and Human Services; and Tribal Work Experience, AVT, Direct Employment, Adult Education and Higher Education from the BIA.

2. The Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975 (P.L. 93-638) and C.F.R. Part 900, as amended by P.L. 103-413, P.L. 103-435, and P.L. 103-437 on October 1994 and November 2, 1994, assures "maximum Indian participation in the direction of educational as well as other federal services to Indian communities so as to render such services more responsive to the needs and desires of those communities" (P.L. 93-638). This amendment gives freedom to American Indians on reservations to develop and implement their own educational and social programs. Some tribes have taken advantage of this amendment and have designed and implemented a wide variety of programs. The federal government covers support costs (which include start-up costs, pre-award costs and technical and administrative costs), as well as the costs of the programs that are contracted under P.L. 93-638. With this regulation, the tribes are familiar with tribal takeover of financing and administration. Tribes such as Navajo Nation originally proposed to administer TANF under P.L. 93-638 because under this law the federal government provides support costs of program administration. On the other hand, the 1996 federal welfare legislation does not require the federal government to cover the support costs of implementing TANF by tribes. Once the tribes secure funding (program costs plus support costs) from different federal agencies under the P.L., 93-638, they may combine these funds under P.L. 102-477 and report to a single agency.

IV. DATA SOURCES

The state of Arizona has been implementing the EMPOWER program as a part of its TANF block grant since November 1, 1995. In order to gain early feedback on the impact of the 1996 federal welfare legislation, we collected data from six main sources: 1) The Department of Health and Human Services web sites; 2) The U.S. Bureau of the Census and other national data sources; 3) Administrative data on welfare recipients by reservations from the state of Arizona, beginning in January 1995; 4) The Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) and Tribal Social Services (aggregate data); 5) Tribes and the Inter-Tribal Council of Arizona (ITCA), with supplementary information gathered through site visits and service provider interviews (documentation regarding information on TANF options and implementation); and 6) Focus group interviews with welfare recipients and former recipients on the three reservations selected as focus sites. The data sources, with a description of data provided by each source, are outlined below:

1) The Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS). We obtained the status of welfare caseloads by state electronically from the web sites of the DHHS (see tables 1-3). In addition, we obtained the status of all Tribal TANF Plans and their characteristics from this source (see Tables 8-9).

2) U.S. Bureau of the Census and other national level data. The U.S. Bureau of the Census provided us with data specific to each reservation for the year of 1990.[10] We entered this data for all reservations in Arizona. This data has allowed us to compare and contrast Indian communities within Arizona. We will also compare how aggregate information on reservations changes between 1990 and the year 2000. We report several important social and economic indicators for these communities (using the 1990 census) in Tables 4-7.

3) The Department of Economic Security (DES), Phoenix, Arizona. The DES provided us with administrative data on welfare recipients by reservations beginning January 1995 (see Tables 10-11).

4) The Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), Phoenix, and Tribal Social Services. The Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) provided us with aggregate data, including annual data on crime, child abuse and neglect, as well as Tribal General Assistance (GA) caseloads and expenditures by reservation.[11]

5) Tribes and the Inter Tribal Council of Arizona (ITCA). Tribes and the ITCA provided us with two types of information. First, many tribes provided us with statistical reports of services and assistance in their communities in aggregate format, which we have used to gain a clearer picture of their particular situations. Second, tribes and the ITCA provided us with documentation regarding information on TANF

[10] We hope to receive 1999 Census data by reservation electronically so we can compare change over the decade.

[11] This data is incomplete in that we are still updating our database with information from several tribes within Arizona. This report, therefore, does not include analysis of these data.

options and implementation. In regards to the latter, we have received some documentation from tribes and the ITCA about the developmental process of administration of TANF programs (three tribes). However, most of our information in this area has been gathered through interviews (phone or on-site) with tribal service providers and state Department of Economic Security (DES) administrators responsible for the coordination of services on or near reservation communities. These telephone interviews were conducted between October and December of 1997.

6) Focus group interviews. Perhaps some of the best sources of information allowing us to form an accurate picture of the early impacts of welfare reform on American Indian families with children have been the focus group interviews with TANF recipients and other former welfare recipients. Demographic profiles of these recipients are documented in the endnote'.

We had originally requested ITCA staff in Arizona to help us contact all the tribes in Arizona and explore their interest in participating in this study. Of all the tribes in Arizona, three tribes (Salt River, San Carlos and Navajo Nation) demonstrated a particular interest in being part of this study. As a result, we chose these three tribes as our focus tribes for this study. In addition, two tribes (Hopi and White Mountain) invited us to visit their reservations. As planned, we visited these five reservations (Salt River, San Carlos, Hopi, Navajo Nation and White Mountain) for two weeks in January of 1998 and group interviewed tribal and state service providers on four reservations (Salt River, San Carlos, Hopi, and Navajo Nation). During that same visit we conducted focus group interviews with current and former welfare recipients residing on three focus reservations (Salt River, San Carlos and Navajo Nation). For one week in May 1998, then, we made a follow-up visit to each of the three focus reservations. During these visits, we group interviewed with the same group of tribal service providers and conducted follow-up focus group interviews with welfare recipients.

The in-depth group interviews we completed with tribal service providers and welfare recipients have been a valuable source of information about the early impacts of welfare reform. We reviewed and analyzed information collected from multiple sources using a qualitative, story format. To maintain confidentiality, we do not identify individuals, offices they are associated with or the tribal names in any of the findings of this study. Tribal names are mentioned only if the information is public, derived mainly from secondary data, and is exemplary in nature.[12] Findings of this study are presented below.

[12] Comments of tribal members and employees of ITCA, BIA and the Arizona Department of Economic Security were incorporated before making this report public.

V. FINDINGS

A. Tribal administration of TANF

Though the 1996 welfare law brought an end to entitlements for families with children, it has bestowed power upon tribal governments wishing to administer their own programs. Until now, states have been the principal administrators of AFDC programs, including the administration of AFDC benefits to American Indian families on reservations. Of the 500 tribes and 310 reservations recorded in the country by the 1990 Census (Shumway & Jackson, 1995), only five tribes in Wisconsin[13] subcontracted with the state to provide AFDC and to determine eligibility requirements for Food Stamp and Medicaid on their reservations. In contrast, the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 provides each tribe with two options. Tribes may either participate in their respective state programs or submit their own TANF Plans to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services (DHSS). The latter choice will allow tribes to receive funding in the form of a block grant.[14] However, states will continue to determine Medicaid and Food Stamp eligibility on reservations and will also continue to administer these programs.[15]

Tribal Plans can be different from the federal mandate in that the law allows tribes the flexibility to determine: (a) their own service populations (e.g., whether to cover all registered members or only those members residing on reservations.), (b) their definitions of "family" (e g., how to define "Indian" and "Non-Indian" families), (c) the scope of assistance (e.g., whether to include childcare or not), (d) job participation rates, and (e) variations in time limitations.

Nationally, as of April 1999, 22 Indian Tribal Organizations had submitted their own formal plans[16] for tribal TANF programs (see Tables 8 & 9), of which the DHHS had approved 19 plans (DHHS, 1998). As shown in Table 8, these 19 TANF plans are located in the following states: four in Wisconsin, three in Arizona (Pascua Yaqui, Salt River and White Mountain), two each in Oregon and Washington, and one each in Oklahoma, South Dakota, Wyoming, California, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana and Alaska. These 19 Indian Tribal Organizations with approved plans are generally smaller (see Table 9) and have lower levels of unemployment compared to other tribes. Many of them have modeled their tribal TANF administration plans after their state plans, making only slight modifications in terms of time limits and work requirements (see Table 9). In general, state plans tend to be more stringent than federal requirements, whereas the tribal plans tend to be more generous than state requirements. For instance, Arizona's Department of Economic Security (DES) has instituted a two-year time limit[17] on benefit receipt within the first five years of receiving benefit, whereas the Pascua Yaqui tribe (in Arizona) will waive the two-year time limit for adult recipients who are meeting the work activity requirement.

[14] Tribes may loser their portions of state matches if this option is chosen, however, Arizona has passed legislation that will allow tribes to retain state matching funds.

[15] However, the Arizona state legislature has recently authorized the state DFS to request a federal waiver from the DHHS that permits those tribal governments that perform eligibility determinations for TANF to also perform the Medicaid and Food Stamp eligibility determinations. The state of Arizona will provide state matching monies for the administrative costs associated with the Medicaid and Food Stamp eligibility based on federal guidelines.

Based on recommendations made by Indian leaders at the National Tribal Leaders Conference on Welfare Reform,[18] the Inter-Tribal Council of Arizona (ITCA) outlined five different options a tribe may consider in implementing welfare reform. These options include. (1) leaving TANF program administration completely to the state, (2) subcontracting to provide a state-administered TANF program, (3) completely administering TANF at the tribal level, (4) allowing the state to subcontract in providing a tribal-administered TANF program, and (5) subcontracting with a private organization for the provision of a tribal-administered TANF program. In other words, the options the tribes select may vary. For example, of the five options, the Arizona tribes with approved tribal plans have selected two different plans Salt River has chosen option three whereas the other two tribes, Pasqua Yaqui and White Mountain, have chosen the fourth option.

For those tribes selecting option four, there is even more variance. This variance is a result of the impossibility of predicting the exact nature of the subcontract agreement between tribes and the state. For instance, the Pasqua Yaqui tribe has subcontracted with the state to determine TANF eligibility, issue payments and generate monthly reports, while White Mountain is relying on the state to determine TANF eligibility, implement job placement activities and generate monthly reports.

In addition to the three tribes with approved tribal TANF Plans (Pasqua Yaqui, Salt River and White Mountain), several other tribes in Arizona are also making efforts to develop their own TANF programs. For example, the Navajo Nation plan is being reviewed by the District court; and two additional tribes expect to develop plans at some point in the future. The remaining 14 Arizona tribes have elected to stay with the state-administered TANF program, either through a deliberate decision-making process, or through "default"— by not formally considering the option at this time. Several of these tribes that have not yet formally considered implementing tribal TANF deliberately chose not to because they are small communities comprised of few TANF-receiving-residents. Thus, these tribes feel that administering their own program would not be worthwhile. For example, seven of these 14 tribes (Ak-Chin, Cocopah, Fort McDowell, Fort Mojave, Havasupai, Kaibab Paiute and Yavapai Apache) have less than seven households receiving TANF (see Table 10). Five tribes (Ak-Chin, Cocopah, Fort McDowell, Fort Mojave and Yavapai Prescott) have either employment opportunities (due to economic development opportunities within or near reservations) or tribal per capita payments, which disqualify families for receipt of other welfare assistance (e.g., TANF, Tribal General Assistance).

Two smaller tribes, in order to compensate for tribal size, are considering the option of collaboration with other tribes to develop and implement joint TANF programs – one tribe is considering working with a number of other small tribes, and the other tribe is considering working with a large tribe that has already submitted a TANF proposal. Lastly, five larger tribes have adopted a "wait and see" approach before developing their own TANF program. They are hoping to learn from the experiences of those tribes which are in the process of implementing tribal TANF and want to make sure that they have "all the facts regarding their options." These tribes, electing to remain with the state TANF program, felt that they lacked the infrastructure necessary for the administration of a public assistance program, such as facilities for service delivery, and computer hardware and software for information management systems. For these more hesitant tribes, lack of staff and staff training were also perceived as potential setbacks for the implementation of a TANF program.

[17] In Arizona, the adult portion of the benefit is eliminated after a family reaches the two-year time limit within the first five years, but cash assistance for the children in the family is continued for the five years. The two-year time limit began on November 1, 1995 and the 60-month lifetime limit began on October 1, 1996.

In making future decisions about TANF, many tribes are networking with one another (either on their own initiative or through the ITCA) to continue their decision-making and plan development process.[19] By May of 1998 four tribes had formed task forces to perform in-depth studies on issues of welfare reform. Most of these task forces included social service administrators, as well as other service providers and frontline staff. One task force included the local DES staff. Some task forces included subcommittees in areas such as economic development, child support and education. In one community, the Tribal Vice Chair initiated a review of the TANF legislation and engaged social service staff in forecasting the impact of welfare reform on tribal members. In general, formal decisions were made after task forces or social service staff made their recommendations to the Tribal Chair, the Tribal Council, or a committee of the Tribal Council. Final decisions were then voted upon and made by Tribal Councils.

These task forces have been instrumental in expediting TANF implementation decisions on reservations. For instance, between our last meeting in January and our follow up visit in May 1998, the Salt River tribe had created a task force that met every other week for three months. As a result of these task-force-meetings, this tribe arrived at the decision to implement its own TANF program. The task force decided it would like to have a proposal ready so that it could begin a tribal TANF program by July. In order to arrive at the July deadline, the task force began meeting in February to prepare a proposal for the Tribal Council. Two months later the Tribal Council received and approved the proposal, which was then sent to the federal government for approval.

In general, tribes had similar motives for administering their own tribal TANF programs. For the tribes which have either submitted TANF plans or plan to do so in the near future, the main reasons service providers asserted for wanting to implement tribal TANF programs are.

1) To give their community members greater flexibility in regards to the enforcement of work requirements and time limits. The need for flexibility in the enforcement of work requirements and time limits is underscored by the concerns of many social service providers who fear that the lack of employment opportunities on or near reservations will make it impossible for some recipients to meet all the deadlines under the state plan Local DES staff are aware of these factors in the decision-making process. One DES staff member said, "The major reason they decided to do tribal TANF was to help the people who would have been sanctioned."

[19] Some efforts at developing TANF strategies have "slacked off" or slowed down due to the impact of waivers for reservations with unemployment rates over 50 percent. As one social services manager said, "The waiver has taken the gun away from our temples. We will be allowed to move at a slower pace."

Flexibility was also a motive for another tribe which decided to develop its own plan. This tribe was interested in formulating its own plan because doing so allowed for mobility in the selection of program requirements, while still enabling the tribe to use the state as its service provider. As the Tribal Social Services Director said, "The state made it simple to do TANF on our own. They offered the state matching funds and agreed to subcontract to provide the services. We felt it would benefit community members because we would have flexibility and be able to protect recipients from time limits."

As expected, greater flexibility has permitted tribes to develop a variety of distinct TANF plans, differing both from the federal mandate and from one another. For instance, the Navajo Nation has proposed to require only five percent of adult participants (ages 18 to 60) to comply with work requirements in the first two years, with a minimum of 10 hours per week for the first and second years.[20]

2) To maintain minimum benefit payments to families with children. The DES in Arizona recently agreed to endow private companies with the right to administer TANF on reservations. This concession has presented tribal members with a new concern. That is, tribes fear that private companies may make compliance with welfare requirements and living conditions under welfare even more difficult than they were under state supervision. For example, private companies may lower benefits to families, as well as advocate for even stricter time limits and work requirements. Substantiating the validity of this concern, service providers of a tribal community in which TANF services may be privatized in the future indicated that the proposed plan under privatization is not only more stringent in its suggested time limits and work requirements than is the state plan, but also that the privatized plan would cap benefit levels for families, regardless of family size.

3) To develop programs that are culturally appropriate. In general, tribes are concerned about maintaining culturally appropriate programs. Privatization is one area in which the fear of the potential loss of culturally appropriate programs is manifested. Tribes are concerned that the private companies may lack cultural sensitivity to Indian communities. As one social service provider stated, "The private companies may not be sensitive to cultural aspects of our Indian Community." One tribal TANF coordinator said, "We have a lot of confidence in our tribal capabilities. Tribes have struggled under bureaucracies before. We don't want to work like that with the state. We want a government-to-government agreement." He also stressed that this was the opportunity to design something that "truly reflected" their cultural values and traditions: "Ideas about welfare reform apply mostly to urban areas. Our community is unique. We have a unique lifestyle, and our plan is designed to fit our unique needs."

Similar desires to protect tribal sovereignty and culture were articulated by other tribes intending to develop their own TANF plans in the future. A service provider for one of these tribes stated.

> "We have a support system that is centuries old. Traditionally, the kinship and clan systems have provided assistance for their members. If we do our own program, we have to structure TANF to build on what's already there. We have to protect the tribal system of people helping each other. We need to 'massage' government regulations so they fit what is here. We have a totally different philosophy from other tribes, and we don't want to undermine our culture."

[20] Ten percent of all families on the third year and thereafter.

Tribes are concerned that private companies may not appreciate the cultural differences in Indian community. This concern is reflected in the comment of a Tribal Social Service Provider who said, "They do not appreciate our past and our history." The social service provider's concern is corroborated by evidence showing that American Indians experience discrimination in employment agencies, a circumstance which may be better addressed by a tribe than a private company. A such, most service providers indicated that as privatization proceeds, tribes will have additional impetus for administering their own plan.

4) To use TANF programming as an opportunity to restructure and coordinate tribal welfare systems. Tribes that are considering the possibility of implementing their own TANF program have concluded that they are better positioned to develop services that are flexible, generous and culturally appropriate. An additional incentive for tribal TANF programming, specific to Arizona, is the agreement of the state of Arizona to provide state matching funds[21] to the tribes. Yet, tribal members are aware that even with state matching funds, if they administer their own TANF program, they will have fewer funds than if they continue with the state program. Also, they recognize that the monies provided by the state for social services is inadequate. Still, tribes think they will be able to assist more families with fewer funds than the state or a private company could because, as stated by a Tribal Social Service Provider, tribes generally feel that "as a community, we know our own people better."

To adjust to the new changes, especially to save costs, tribes are consolidating their programs and services. For instance, a Tribal Social Service Provider from the Salt River tribe indicated that his tribe is consolidating different programs to "create a new Division of Family Assistance where we will merge together GA (Tribal General Assistance), JTPA (Job Training and Partnership Act), TANF, NEW JOBS (Native Employment Works and Job Opportunity and Basic Skills) and Welfare-to-Work." Additionally, this tribe has discussed the possibility of coordinating support systems such as childcare and transportation. To facilitate some of these changes, this tribe created a Coordinating Committee so that, according to a Tribal Social Service Provider, when "an individual comes in who needs mental health services, transportation and childcare, the tribal Coordinating Committee can decide how all the programs in the community will assist the individual. This is a better system than simply referring individuals to different departments." The tribe is concerned, however, about consolidating departments under Public Law 477. Concern about PL-477 arises primarily from the threat of budget cuts once funds are pooled into one source.

As tribes implement their own TANF services some Tribal Governments may put additional dollars into these services if they see the connection between welfare reform implementation and tribal social and economic development. A tribal member hoped "that the tribal government will be involved in this initiative to implement a tribal welfare system." For the Salt River tribe, for example, interest and participation from Tribal Governments has increased as a result of the creation of a tribal administration system. Tribal service providers indicated that the tribe will submit a request to their Tribal Council to assist in funding the tribally administered welfare program. The service providers on this reservation estimate that they will need over one million dollars for the program, with over half of the money allocated to start-up costs, which will provide for the purchase of buildings, furniture and computers.

B. Cooperation, collaboration, and communication

Coordination, communication and collaboration regarding the implementation of social programs and services have increased since the passage of the PRWORA in the following ways: 1) tribes are communicating directly with the federal government; 2) tribes are coordinating with state social service administrators; and 3) collaboration and communication is occurring on a regular basis between tribes, as well as among service providers and administrators within each tribe.

Under the PRWORA, both states and tribes find it advantageous to ensure the coordination and provision of TANF and related services. On this topic, one Tribal Social Service Director stated, "This is an exciting time. We are coming to the table to talk with state workers. We are tapping resources not previously available and working to 'know the other side.'" Also to this end, another Tribal Social Service Director said, "The Vice Chair was interested in tribal TANF all along, and the state made it simple to do our own. They offered the state match and agreed to subcontract to provide the services."

Overall, state DES staff have cooperated with tribes and assisted them in making decisions regarding TANF. In addition, many DES staff are supportive of tribal efforts to administer their own plans. A DES administrator, commenting on a tribe considering tribal administration of TANF in the future, had this to say on the subject:

> "I think the tribe(s) will eventually move forward with their own TANF plans. That's the way to go. The tribe(s) will have more flexibility, and the family cap is waived. Plus they do not have a huge caseload. They could also contract back with DES."

During the TANF decision-making process, state DES staff (including staff from the Intergovernmental Relations office) met with tribal staff to provide information and resource materials, especially to those tribal staff members interested in developing their own TANF plans. In addition, local DES staff also provided assistance to five tribes while they were making their TANF decisions. A DES District Program Manager commented that one of the tribes electing to utilize their own plan "looked at all the options carefully and did a thorough job gathering information." She added that this same tribe has a "strong social services department."

Even with so much support however, most tribes lack the technical skills and the infrastructures required to administer TANF services. As a result, even the two tribes in Arizona that have received approval from DHHS to run their own TANF programs have subcontracted with the state to implement different components of TANF. In other words, TANF money will flow from the federal government to the tribe, and then to the state. As such, tribes will enjoy the freedom to design culturally sensitive programs while the state will provide the technical skills needed to implement the program. For the first time, Tribal Governments and service providers are negotiating with the state in the bargaining process. So far, the relationship between the tribes and the state appears to be a productive one. Thus, it is possible that welfare recipients will truly benefit from such state-tribal relationships.

At the tribal level, the 1996 welfare legislation has also led to increased communication, collaboration and coordination. Among Tribal Social Service Providers, the legislation has afforded them an opportunity to convene for the assessment of the services and needs of their respective communities. Improvements in this area were noticeable even between our January and May visits to reservations in 1998. A Tribal Social Service Provider indicated that the idea of integration and consolidation of existing programs is "embedded in peoples' [Tribal Social Service Providers] minds and has become a must and a necessity." Another Tribal Social Service Provider, alluding to the idea that welfare reform is not only focused on social services and social welfare, but also on departments of employment, childcare, transportation, education and training, stated: "we're getting to the point where we have the key programs, components and collaboration between departments to make TANF work."

As a result of increased communication among Tribal Social Service Providers, several tribes have recognized the need to restructure already existing services. By doing so, tribes feel they will be better equipped to meet the needs of their communities. For example, in order to improve coordination, one community combined its health and social service departments into one administrative entity. Also seeking to facilitate greater coordination and communication, other communities have initiated long-range planning processes to integrate economic development, job training and educational staff.

Despite these efforts to increase cooperation, collaboration and communication, refinements continue to be necessary. One area in need of improvement stems from the necessity of guidance in tribal attempts to implement the TANF program. One Tribal Social Service Provider noted, "There are no rules or guidelines in place to direct us on how to develop our own program. We have to interpret the law as we see fit, so we are drawing from other program guidelines and public laws [such as 412, 477 and 638]." So far, the federal government has not contributed to tribal efforts to integrate existing programs. The state, on the other hand, has provided useful technical assistance by meeting with tribes and creating "transition teams," i.e. teams representing both state and Tribal Social Service Providers which examine ways that tribes can take over responsibility for TANF implementation. Additionally, the Tribal Task Forces, composed of experts from different departments, have been crucial in developing TANF programs. Still, expressing a common sentiment among tribes, one Tribal Social Service Provider stated, tribes feel that they "need greater understanding about the need for resources at the congressional level - this is a long term commitment from the Federal government."

Implicit in the efforts to improve cooperation, collaboration and communication between tribes, is the notion that such progress, will simplify the administration of tribal TANF. For example, a tribal member stated:

> "If a recipient moves off the reservation to find employment in a nearby city, she still participates in tribal programs to meet her work requirements, but the state is not aware of it. Therefore, the state notifies the recipient that she must participate in the state JOBS program. The recipient then has to contact the tribe, who has to straighten it out with the state."

C. Tribal challenges to self-administer TANF

There are challenges associated with tribal attempts to self-administer TANF that need to be met. Some of these challenges are listed below:

1. State match

Under the 1996 federal welfare legislation tribes will receive varying levels of support for TANF administration from their respective states. This discrepancy may affect a tribe's ability to administer TANF. The 1996 federal welfare legislation does not require states to support tribes that wish to implement TANF independently. In other words, tribes are only entitled to federal dollars, not state dollars. Thus far, we are aware of only nine states in the nation (e.g., Alabama, Arizona, Oregon, California, Idaho, Montana, Minnesota, Washington and Wyoming) that have agreed to provide state matching funds (DHHS, 1998), all of which may or may not provide the state match at the 1994 expenditure level. That is, states that are matching tribal expenditures may choose to give tribes varying percentages of the 1994 state match (e.g. some states may provide 80% while others will choose to provide higher or lower percentages). In order to compensate for this loss, tribes must make up the remaining percentages either through caseload reductions or cut in program expenditures. Both the 1994 expenditure level, as well as the option to provide varying percentages of the state match, apply even if the number of welfare recipients in a given tribe rose after 1994.[22]

2. Support costs

As indicated earlier, tribes are encouraged to develop TANF administration plans under P.L. 102-477, the law which allows them to combine funds from different sources into one funding stream. Of the 19 Indian communities with approved TANF plans, two communities have structured their plans to meet the requirements of P.L. 102-477.[23] However, it appears that tribes may not be able to use P.L. 93-638, the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975, to administer TANF services. As stated earlier, P.L. 93-638 allows tribes the freedom to develop and implement their own social programs and facilitates this process through the provision of start-up costs. If this law is not applicable to TANF implementation, tribes opting to administer their own TANF programs must secure their own start-up costs. Included in these costs is money to strengthen infrastructure, as well as money to hire and train additional caseworkers. This is a concern for all the tribes we interviewed. In Arizona, Navajo Nation, attempting to secure support costs, originally applied to DHHS to administer TANF under the (P.L. 93-638). The Secretary of the DHHS has rejected the Navajo Nation proposal to administer TANF under P.L., 93-638, but recently the Navajo Nation has appealed that decision in the Federal District Court in Phoenix. Other tribes are waiting to hear how the Navajo Nation's application will be decided so they can prepare their TANF administration application using either P.L. 93-638 or P.L. 102-477.

Also, the Navajo Nation has experience with the administration of several programs (e.g., GA, NEW JOBS, JTPA, Welfare-to-Work, childcare, transportation, Women Infant and Children (WIC) program and food stamp distribution) and hopes to create an employment-oriented TANF program. However, the tribe needs additional funds to integrate these programs. So far, the tribe has received general funds (supplemental dollars) from the Tribal Council in the amount of $1.4 million for (TANF) start-up costs. According to a Tribal Social Service Provider, "This is only a drop in the bucket, but it is something that we, as a nation, have understood that we would have to provide some seed money to get a program such as this [TANF] off the ground." Additional funds are needed from the federal government and the state to replenish funds the tribe has spent on TANF.

[22] According to the Department of Economic Security of Arizona four tribes have experienced an increase in the number of households receiving TANF (Colorado River, Hualapai, Pasqua Yaqui and San Carlos) between January 1995 and January 1998.

3. State and tribal governments are not treated equally

The 1996 federal legislation has strengthened the "government-to-government" relationship between the federal government and tribes by allowing tribes greater flexibility in the design and administration of welfare programs on reservations. However, tribes are not treated on par with states in at least three areas. First, states are allowed to keep unexpended TANF funds for future (unlimited time) use, but tribes must return any unexpended federal funds to the federal government within two years. Second, states receive additional money to evaluate their performance, whereas tribes that implement TANF independently do not receive evaluation money. Third, states receive incentives for reducing caseloads, unwed births, and teen pregnancies, whereas tribes which are able to make reductions in the same areas do not receive incentives

4. Discrepancy in federal and state fiscal years

Federal and state awards may follow separate fiscal years. For example, in Arizona, a tribe that takes over the responsibility of implementing TANF will receive both federal and state funds, but federal and state awards follow separate fiscal years (the state fiscal year runs from July to June, but the federal fiscal year runs from October to September). Tribal Administrators did not mention this as a major problem, but it does make administrative tasks more complex.

5. Technical expertise

As indicated earlier, most tribes lack the technical skills and the infrastructures required to administer TANF programs. This is a big concern for tribes that wish to self-administer TANF. Lack of technical expertise means that tribes will have to either subcontract with the state or a private organization. By doing so, tribes lose employment opportunities on reservations. Currently, tribes within Arizona seem to prefer to subcontract with the state rather than with a private organization. Two of the three tribes in Arizona that have received approval from DHHS to run their own TANF programs have subcontracted with the state to implement different aspects of TANF.

D. Tribal response to assist TANF recipients

Tribes are aware that it is a challenge to employ poor women on public assistance, simply because many reservations are geographically isolated, have high unemployment rates, and have welfare populations that lack child care, transportation, education and employment skills. Tribal members are concerned about their ability to move these families from welfare to work with a shrunken budget.

Tribes generally feel that TANF must be an investment from the federal government, i.e. it is not tribes' responsibility to commit their funds directly for TANF. They think that the federal government must provide funds to tribes because of their historic trust responsibility to tribes. A Tribal Social Service Provider indicated that every time a budget related to TANF services is proposed, "the tribal leadership reminds us of the trust responsibility and that this is what solidifies the government to government relationship."

Indirectly, however, Tribal Governments have committed funds through programs already in existence at the tribal level, which will contribute to TANF services. The tribes consider these indirect funds as "third party, in-kind contributions" for the development of TANF services. On one reservation, Tribal Social Service Providers indicated that their economic development department had started introducing some employment initiatives "to focus on those coming off the welfare roles." Recognizing the low employment skills of many welfare recipients, the department began developing low-skill jobs. In addition, some chapters on this reservation have begun their own initiatives to encourage economic development targeted to increase the employment of welfare recipients.

Tribal members of another reservation noted that it is harder to find employment for welfare recipients than it is to motivate them to look for work. They indicated that many welfare recipients struggled with finding long-term employment. Through the Job Training and Partnership Act (JTPA) program, recipients are placed in a job for 1,000 hours (which amounts to about six months of work) in order to receive work experience. One recipient worked in a data entry job while another cooked for a senior citizens home in her community. Both recipients worked 40 hours per week, earned the minimum wage or slightly above, and enjoyed their jobs. Although most employers seek employees with work experience, several focus group participants indicated that JTPA did not provide the experience that they needed to find long-term employment. One of the recipients had finished her 1,000 hours during our May 1998 focus group interview. She did not find a long-term job after her JTPA training, even though she sent out 15 applications: "Right now I am looking for volunteer work at my previous work experience job." The other JTPA participant had not finished her 1,000 hours, but nonetheless was aware that her employer would not hire her, and therefore was seeking employment to begin after her job training ended. She sent out four applications, but had "not heard news from them." During our May visit, we spoke with a focus group participant who had recently reapplied for welfare after her JTPA training ended because she was not able to find employment. She had not received a welfare check yet. She was distressed about receiving TANF: "TANF is too much for me. It costs a lot of money to get the paper work together and to drive to the office." To be eligible for TANF, she must provide proof that she is seeking employment. This requirement is especially difficult because she lives 55 miles away (one way) from the nearest welfare office.

Most employers are reluctant to hire welfare recipients after the 1,000 hours have been exhausted. As a result, recipients are trapped in a "vicious six-month cycle of work experience and TANF participation." This issue of employers wishing to employ individuals for the 1,000 hours job training period, but not after this period ends, is a problem on reservations. To end this cycle, one of the tribes recognizes the importance of encouraging both private and tribal employers to view welfare recipients as long-term investments and to provide them with training and experience that they are looking for in an employee. On this particular reservation, there is a movement to develop "an agreement with personnel departments that once a position becomes available, the employer will give the welfare recipient a shot at the job."

E. Changes in Attitudes and Behavior

According to Tribal Social Service Providers and DES staff, there is evidence of parents' increased work activity (consisting of forms signed by local employers), changes in attitudes toward welfare and greater interest in education and training. To this end, the Director of JTPA for one tribe said:

> "A lot of our TANF recipients are looking for employment and participating in job search activities. Clients are coming in more. Many have found employment, for example, in entry-level jobs in retail, although some of it is seasonal. Also, the state JOBS office steers many of them toward jobs."

In addition, one state JTPA Coordinator said, "A lot of tribal members are going to work. They see that [the federal government] is serious about work. Most welfare recipients are complying. This is a positive impact."

Overall, one tribe has noticed more compliance among welfare recipients to participate in job search activities. The quota for reducing the welfare roles has not been achieved, but, according to at least one Tribal Social Service Provider, a change in culture and attitudes towards welfare has occurred· "Everyone is wondering what is going to happen." However, adjustments are still needed in order to support former recipients once they find employment. For example, according to another Tribal Social Service Provider, "If a recipient finds a job at the minimum wage she is dropped from childcare support. A more effective program would provide assistance for at least a year while the recipient is getting on her feet. We need to develop a transitional section in our plan."

Focus group members attested to the increase in work activities by describing their own efforts to meet TANF requirements. Five focus group members living in a community located near an urban center felt that changes in welfare were positive. They noted behavioral changes in others as well, as is indicated by one focus group member's comment: "Since welfare reform began, younger people are coming out now. More people are riding the [commuter] van in the morning. There are more people working." However, these perceptions were not necessarily shared by focus group participants living on more isolated, rural reservations.

The number of referrals to education and job training programs has increased, which, according to Tribal Social Service Providers, is "very important." A local DES staff member, who is also a member of the tribe she serves, commented that "TANF is opening people's eyes. It's going to change the way we think as Indian people." According to her, recipients are "reading and asking questions about what is going to happen and what is happening." One DES staff person said that welfare reform "woke up a lot of people. Many recipients went into GED programs. Welfare reform has had a significant psychological impact." He also commented that the impact would be negative if people return to complacency because of the work requirement/time limit waiver granted to tribes with an unemployment rate of 50 percent or higher.

The Director of Social Services for one tribe stated, "Welfare reform has made women realize they need to do something. Many were scared they would get cut off when they received the general letter from the state informing them of changes. They came in to the tribal offices and were told they wouldn't be cut off [because the tribe is implementing its own program]." Another Tribal Social Service Provider said, "People realize they need to be trained for work, but the jobs may not be there. Welfare reform has created psychological stress. It will require a different lifestyle for people who receive assistance." One Director of JTPA for a tribe noted that while more TANF recipients were requesting services, many recipients were still "afraid of change." Also to this end, a Tribal Social Service Provider said recipients were "afraid of getting cut off." This anxiety about new TANF requirements can lead to other adverse effects. Substantiating this claim, one DES worker noted that "A lot of people get depressed. They want to drink [alcohol] if they lose their welfare or lose their job" In addition, a focus group participant expressed anxiety about TANF when she said, "The money goes too fast. People don't live like we do [in remote areas]. They don't understand what I'm going through. . . The world's going to change. Soon there won't be any assistance."

In addition to welfare recipients, Tribal Social Service Providers are also reexamining their roles as a result of the 1996 federal welfare legislation. One Tribal Social Service Provider stated, "It is the expectation of people that the tribe has got to do something, especially the people who have assumed the dependency role. They expect the Tribal Government to help them. Reality hasn't registered that public assistance is no longer an entitlement." Another Tribal Social Service Provider stated, "We have to change people's habits. People haven't seen the necessity of getting out of the rut. Minimum wage pays less than public assistance [when food stamps and Medicaid are included], but getting jobs will help other problems." Also on this subject, a Tribal Social Service Manager stated, "We have to redefine what employment is. Our people think of work as ranching, farming, crafts, and building homes. It is not full-time, but people work [sporadically] as work is available."

F. Sanctions, Relocations and Opting Out of the System

As indicated earlier, Arizona has opted to provide benefits to adults for a maximum of 24 months within the first 60 months and to waive the 24-month time limit for adults residing on reservations with 50 percent or higher unemployment rates. Many of the immediate impacts of the 1996 welfare legislation, in regards to terminations or sanctions, have been delayed for reservations with waivers. In general, waivers have stifled some of the initial urgency tribes felt while developing and implementing their TANF plans. Tribal Social Service Providers and DES staff were aware of only a few terminations or sanctions in the various communities. Due to the granting of waivers in many reservations with high unemployment,[24] sanctions that have been given are the result of recipients not complying with the job readiness training, immunization, school enrollment or child support requirements. Such sanctions have motivated recipients to actively prepare for and seek employment. Sanctions increase incrementally, beginning at 25 percent of benefits, then rising to 50 percent and 100 percent, if noncompliance with program requirements continues.

Speaking about one reservation which did not receive a waiver, a DES Office Manager reported that due to noncompliance with child support and work requirements, approximately 40 people had been sanctioned in the past six months. On another reservation, of the 27 parents that have had their TANF checks held due to noncompliance with the employment program attendance policy, only seven of these parents returned to the employment program. The tribe has not followed the remaining 20 parents to determine what strategies they are employing to survive. One question that needs to be asked is: Have they found employment or have they moved in with relatives who receive other public assistance such as GA (Tribal General Assistance) or SSI (Supplemental Security Income)? The tribe is certain, however, that the parents are not receiving GA instead of TANF because persons who leave TANF voluntarily are not eligible for GA.

Tribal Social Service Providers on two reservations, speculating on how parents are surviving without TANF or employment, thought that women might be relocating to more urban areas in order to find work. Some of these women are leaving their children with relatives on the reservation. One focus group member who was encountering difficulty with meeting work activity requirements, as well as with finding adequate childcare and a stable place to live, reported placing her younger daughter in a boarding school. Other Tribal Social Service Providers felt that women who have been sanctioned might be moving back in with relatives.

Also, reports from current and former welfare recipients and Tribal Social Service Providers suggest that many women have simply been opting out of the system since welfare reform began. Tribal Social Service Providers believe that recipients opt out of the system because there are too many requirements to receive TANF (in terms of paper work) and the welfare offices are too far away for recipients in isolated communities.

One focus group participant said she got off welfare because "it was more of a hindrance than a help. I couldn't meet the appointment and got cut off. I didn't reapply because it was too much of a hassle." Another woman was on welfare but hasn't reapplied because she was "embarrassed to be on aid." She missed an appointment due to school, and she said DES staff were "rude" to her. She stated, "They gave me a hard time because I live with my mom. They asked about my mom's income and said that she should be the one taking care of me."

A manager for a tribal department of employment and training said that his office had sent letters to 150 TANF recipients to inform them of an informational session on JTPA, as well as other options available for meeting work requirements. Only 47 of the 150 showed up. Many of the welfare recipients he works with have asked to see the law for themselves. He reports that many women agree with the comment made by one woman who said: "It looks like a lot of requirements. We don't want to reveal all that information." In addition, he commented that other women agree with the words of a tribal member who said, "Go ahead and sanction me."

G. Employment Opportunities

One of the greatest barriers faced by American Indian communities in implementing welfare to work is the shortage of employment opportunities on or near reservations. Such shortages were mentioned by Tribal Social Service Providers and DES staff alike during both of our visits in January and May of 1998. One Tribal Social Service Provider said, "Even if we trained everyone we wanted, we don't have enough jobs." Another Tribal Social Service Provider echoed this thought:

> "The big concern is that we can train people until we turn blue, but if we don't have the jobs, where will we put these people once they're trained? There is no way we can employ another 6,000 people. It doesn't just take Tribal Government to create jobs, but also churches, employers, and all members of society."

Job opportunities are limited because reservations are isolated from towns and urban areas. As one Tribal Planner commented, "We have no access to the urban employment market" due to transportation difficulties [a topic which will be discussed in a later section] and other barriers."

A few tribes that are not geographically isolated have a lower unemployment rate and their emphasis under welfare reform may be different from those tribes that are isolated. For instance, the Salt River tribe, located in the outskirts of Phoenix, has attracted private business investors. In addition, this tribe opened a casino in May of 1998. In the next five years, this tribe expects to have even more development on the reservation. A private company is developing a resort hotel, a golf course, a casino and a restaurant. Tribal Social Service Providers project that the casino itself will provide as many as 400 jobs for skilled and experienced employees. This tribe, however, is concerned about the mismatch between the skills employers desire and the skills that potential tribal employees actually possess. In order to overcome this barrier, the tribe wishes to emphasize the Indian Preference Act[25] to encourage employers to hire American Indians. Additionally, the tribe would like to encourage employers to, in the words of a Tribal Social Service Provider, "rewrite their job descriptions and hire individuals who may not have the skills or education needed but require them to obtain the skills or education within a specified period." Along with the efforts to change employer behavior, the tribe is concentrating on ensuring that every welfare recipient has at least a GED.

One of the predicted impacts of welfare reform is that it will, as one Tribal Planner suggested, "force the tribes to quit being lackadaisical about economic development." Another Tribal Planner stated, "Welfare reform will not work in rural areas without the economic development piece. However, we may be faced with taking capital from other (tribal) economic development efforts if we have to 'make work' for TANF recipients." A staff member for the economic development department of another tribe reported that the reservation community needed large employers, because "without big companies and operations that pay, it doesn't do any good to have small businesses – they wouldn't survive." Ideas for economic development that tribes are currently exploring are tourism, environmental restoration, arts and crafts, and in-home businesses. In one community, they are renovating an old plant to become a cabinet-making facility. The project will create jobs, providing potential employees with opportunities to make cabinets for homes built by the Tribal Housing Authority. At least one tribe is beginning to explore the idea of tax breaks for employers who hire reservation members.

Other tribes have mixed feelings about private development by outsiders in their communities. Some feel this development is necessary and will provide employment to tribal members, while others do not agree. According to one Tribal Social Service Provider:

> "The tribe has a natural resources based economy. We are not willing to open up our reservation to development by outsiders. Some of our most successful projects have been environmental restoration programs. These programs have captured the ideas of our youth. These projects fit in with the culture and environment of our people. They reconnect our youth to the land."

This Tribal Social Service Provider envisions creating a community service corps (using a WPA-like model) to provide work for TANF recipients and believes that the federal government should provide incentives for tribes to put their resources into work development.

Tribal Social Service Providers in three communities said a growing number of construction jobs were being made available, including jobs for women. Respondents from several reservations also mentioned that more community members were turning to entrepreneurial activities to make money, including selling baked goods and lunches. Two Tribal Social Service Providers noted that, while towns near their reservations had a variety of tourist and service industry (fast food) jobs available, these jobs were low-paying and far away (due to lack of transportation). For at least four tribes, the tribe itself was the largest employer. To meet the work requirements in communities where jobs are scarce, recipients are performing job search activities, which involve little more than going to three local employers every month and obtaining forms signed by potential employers stating that there are no jobs available.

[25] The policy of giving American Indians preference for employment in the BIA and HIS is based upon Section 12 of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934 which was further expanded in 1972 based upon Commissioner Louis Bruce's recommendation. The new policy states that a qualified Indian candidate will be given preference for initial employment in newly created positions, to fill a vacancy, for reinstatement, for training opportunities in preparation for advancement, and for promotions (Lyman, 1973).

H. Support Services

Transportation. Lack of support services, such as for transportation and childcare, is a barrier to employment and training on reservations. On virtually every reservation where a representative was interviewed, transportation was mentioned as one of the main barriers in employing TANF recipients. One Tribal Social Service Provider's statement spoke for everyone when he said that transportation "was and will be one of the main barriers" reservations face in employing their participants. This is especially true for reservations in remote rural areas. As one DES office manager reported.

> "The biggest problem is that people tend to live far out from the nearest town. There is no public transportation. People in remote areas are very isolated. If they need assistance to get to the DES office, the tribe owns a bus, but there's nothing to help people get to jobs. Their available transportation is not adequate for maintaining employment."

A TANF recipient on another reservation said:

> "My transportation is definitely not adequate. My truck is always broken down. The further I go with my education and training, the harder it is. I'm not close enough to town and not close enough to stores. My aunt has to take me shopping. I have to go 30 miles for gas."

A Tribal Social Service Provider stated, "Our transportation problems are shocking. We're close to the city yet we are still isolated. It's like there is a big wall around the community."

One participant was making payments on a vehicle which she considered reliable, but car payments of $700 per month were an economic burden for her family: "It takes a large chunk out of what I get from the state." Another participant owns an unreliable vehicle. Yet another participant had to hitchhike to and from her workplace three days per week. On the other two days, her sister drove her to work. She hopes to buy her own vehicle as soon as she can afford it.

Most of the communities do not receive state assistance to provide transportation for people on a daily basis. One tribe has a transit system, but it operates on a limited route, making stops at few stations. Another tribe provides a van service, but faces similar limitations. Though the vans operate weekdays between 5 a.m. and 5 p.m., they do not have designated stops but instead pick riders up at their homes. In order to utilize this service, a rider must schedule a time. In addition, people in need of the service for transportation to and from their employment sites, benefit only after transportation is afforded to, for example, those in need of medical help, who receive first priority. Though medical emergencies are an understandable priority, jobs may be jeopardized because of the lack of transportation during these situations. Also, the van system is "overburdened" and limited in how far it can travel. On two reservations, people reported that road conditions were another serious barrier. Because roads may be unpaved, even tribes with access to some form of transportation may be disadvantaged due to rain and snow, which make driving on these roads impossible.

Without public transportation, or ownership of their own vehicles, Tribal Social Service Providers and focus group members reported that most people walk (in the few places where this is possible), borrow cars from friends and family or get rides from them, or hitchhike in order to arrive at appointments, training or jobs. In one community, a TANF recipient reported hitchhiking eight miles to a GED class every day. Fortunately, a classmate gives her a ride home. Another recipient reported that she hitchhikes 50 miles to her GED class three times a week.

One reservation provides transportation for "adult GED students to education programs." This tribe is also considering a wheels-to-work program, similar to the plan that the state of Arizona has established. Through this tribe's program, welfare recipients will be able to lease a car from a used car company for $20 a month. Once the recipient finds employment, she will have the option to keep the car, which the company will be able to use as a tax write-off.

Childcare. Both service providers and focus group participants agreed that it would be difficult to move families from welfare to work because support services are not adequate enough to encourage employment. Childcare, in particular, is a problem on all reservations we visited. A focus group participant said: "People can't find childcare for their children while they're at work or training. Now the agencies have a long waiting list." Still, all but the smallest tribes had access to some form of childcare, whether the state, a county or the tribe provided the services itself. While three communities had childcare facilities on site, by far the preferred type of care was in-home care, otherwise known as family care. Family members, including grandparents, and in-home caregivers are eligible for state reimbursement for providing care if their homes are certified for childcare. Several focus group respondents indicated that their relatives were not refunded for childcare services because these participants did not apply for childcare reimbursement, nor were the homes of these relatives certified for childcare.

There is also a lack of trust toward child care providers. Many focus group participants indicated that they preferred family care because they knew their children would be well cared for; they didn't trust daycare facilities and "didn't want strangers taking care of their children." Many of them relied on relatives (grandparents, sisters, aunts, etc.). At least one focus group participant relied on an older sibling to take care of a younger sibling. One respondent has a chronically ill child who needs in-home care. Currently she relies on her unemployed sons to watch this child "and make sure he takes his medication." But she cannot always depend on them. She stated, "I never had a problem with childcare before because I was always there."

Most communities reported increasing demands for childcare in the last several years. Demand for childcare had increased even between our January and May visits in 1998. In one community, the Childcare Director reported the demand had doubled in the last two years. Several tribes maintain long waiting lists for services. For example, in January 1998 in one community, there were 60 children on the waiting list, with only 80 total childcare slots in existence. By May the wait list had grown "substantially" on this reservation. In another community, there were over 100 children on a waiting list for 100 already-filled slots in agencies on the reservation. In at least one community, the waiting list was prioritized, with low-income parents who are working, going to school, or participating in job training receiving first priority. The available services were limited in a number of ways. For example, most providers only care for children from 7 a.m. to 5 or 6 p.m., weekdays only. While a few casinos provide childcare services to employees, even these services were only available during the daytime (although casinos are open 24 hours). Some programs place restrictions on the children they will care for. For example, one facility did not accept children under the age of five. All the service providers who were asked stated that childcare services were not adequate in meeting the needs of their communities. They attribute the shortage of services to the shortage of funding.

I. Education and Job Experience

Other significant barriers to employment include low levels of education and a lack of job experience In one tribal program, 50 percent of the participants had an eighth grade education or less; some participants had only a third grade education. Some JTPA programs require applicants to have GEDs before they can even participate in the program; other JTPA programs offer GED classes. One problem however, noted by several Tribal Social Service Providers is that communities do not have enough GED slots to meet the need. An employment training coordinator said that most TANF recipients who apply for his programs need extensive assistance with reading, writing and basic math. Only two of the educational and vocational training staff persons that we interviewed indicated that the educational services available to tribal members were "adequate." All of the other staff persons described their available educational services as "inadequate." They said that they are having a difficult time meeting the increased demands for services, because "a lot of the individuals referred to us are hard to serve. They need the most basic skills."

Regarding job experience, several focus group members had never held paid positions outside of Job Corps or similar programs. Focus group members were also aware of the importance of experience: "The employers I see each month [to sign her work activity form] tell me the same thing: You need a GED and you need job experience. Although I would have to apply for their jobs if there are openings, I know they won't pick me because I don't have experience."

To address the lack of job experience and training, the Inter Tribal Council of Arizona (ITCA) and six tribes[26] (of which we visited three) in Arizona have received Welfare-to-Work (WtW) funding.[27] This funding is made available to boost unsubsidized employment of hard-to-employ[28] welfare recipients. This money is available to tribes to provide the transitional employment-related assistance (e.g., transportation, childcare, skill development and creation of job opportunities) needed to move hard-to-employ welfare recipients from welfare to unsubsidized work. Unlike states, Indian communities are not required to come up with matching funds in order to receive WtW grants. In addition to TANF and WtW funds, tribes are [26] The six Arizona tribes that received WtW funding are: Cocopah, Gila River, Hualapai tribe, Salt River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community, The Navajo Nation, and White Mountain Apache Tribe.

[27] Only those Indian communities that are operating their own TANF or NEW JOBS programs or are operating employment programs funded through other sources under which "substantial services" are provided to welfare recipients are eligible for WtW grants (Department of Labor, 1998).

[28] Individuals who have been on TANF or AFDC for at least 30 months, lack access to childcare and transportation, those who require substance abuse treatment for employment, and those who have a low human capital (in the form of health, mental health, education and employment experience).

eligible for funding the Native Employment Works (NEW) JOBS program, the Child Care and Development Fund, Child Support Enforcement, Tribal Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA), and the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) Adult and Vocational Training Programs.

Four of the tribes we visited indicated they had NEW (Native Employment Works) JOBS programs. Of these tribes, three received WtW grants. However, the majority of tribes in Arizona did not have NEW JOBS programs and did not receive WtW funding. Some communities have access to state and local employment assistance programs. The majority of communities also had access to JTPA programs, which were either operated by the state or by the tribe. However, one Tribal Social Service Provider said the JTPA program on his reservation was "not receptive to TANF recipients." In another community, a DES administrator reported that "participating in JTPA is the preferred way of meeting the work requirements." Other communities reported a high demand for JTPA services. As one JTPA Director said, "We have very limited funding. We are trying to meet increased demand with the same level of funding." He reported they have more than 30 individuals on their waiting list each quarter.

In general, American Indians on reservations have traditionally "been resistant to education because they have not seen educated Indians receive benefits from their efforts." The attitude of welfare recipients toward education seems to have changed since the passage of the 1996 welfare legislation. Enrollment in tribal schools and colleges has increased. According to reports from residents and Tribal Social Service Providers, TANF recipients are anxiously looking to enroll in education and training programs. All focus group participants indicated that they wanted or needed more education and training. On all reservations we visited, there were waiting lists of women wanting to get into GED programs and/or JTPA training programs (which include training in basic skills, GED preparation, a six-month work experience, referrals to vocational training and other education). Once they are enrolled in these programs, a big problem is solved for TANF recipients, at least for the next six months. Those who have completed training or are on waiting lists for training must document that they are actively looking for employment by collecting signatures from local employers.

Of those participants who had completed the training, two felt that the training they received from JTPA was not enough. In fact, one respondent indicated that she basically taught herself skills: "They didn't train me the way they should." Two respondents were actively planning strategies to gain more training either through night school (so that they can work and attend school concurrently) or through applying for scholarships from the tribe. One participant was taking classes at a four-year college off the reservation to earn credits toward her Associates degree in pre-professional education. She has completed 60 credits toward her degree and hopes to teach computer science.

To further assist welfare recipients, one reservation (Salt River) is emphasizing innovative educational and fund raising strategies. This tribe has a strong vocational training program (e.g., training persons in different trades, such as carpentry, construction and electrical trades) which, according to one Tribal Social Service Provider, "has been successful in placing trainees in jobs." Also according to this same Provider, "Some trainees earn an annual salary of $40,000. There is such great interest in the trade program that there is a need for more instructors, more facilities for training, and more tools and equipment." The education department on this reservation provides services for infants to adults, with a special focus on educating individuals for employment. According to a Tribal Social Service Provider, "We have been gearing up for welfare-to-work for a few years now by developing a school-to-work program." Their "school-to-work" program focuses on education and is accompanied by additional on-the-job training and mentoring. Education services on the reservation are "low cost, relying on resources within the community." To strengthen their educational services, they are seeking funding from other sources For example, the tribe's education department is currently applying for a grant to begin a program called Even Start, which is a five-year program to provide adult education to low-income families. The program will provide training in parenting skills and childcare. Also, the department has assigned staff to locate Request for Proposals (RFPs) on the Internet and to submit proposals for funding. This tribe also recognizes that partnerships with outside funding sources are crucial: "Partnerships between departments is key for education grants and this is happening in the tribe, which will help us get the grants we need."

On this same reservation, Salt River tribe, JTPA programs focus on preparing individuals for specific job openings in the community. JTPA is closely involved with different employers across the reservation to target permanent jobs for welfare recipients. For instance, since enrollment in the tribal schools has increased, the education department is seeking teacher assistants and support staff for all educational levels, i.e. staff for the high school level, the child care level and the Head Start level. JTPA will begin working with the education department to target recent JTPA graduates for such positions. JTPA is also working with the transportation department to hire bus drivers. The programs have been successful in placing graduates in employment. According to one Tribal Social Service Provider, "They are finding jobs right away. The problem is that we need to make supportive services available such as childcare, transportation and providing work clothing, so that they can maintain their employment." JTPA hopes that working with the Coordinating Committee will help make support services accessible for new workers. One example of greater accessibility is that departments will be more aware of which services each department provides. Tribal Social Service Providers also want to ensure that recipients find employment that will lift them out of poverty: "The last thing we want is to place clients in minimum wage jobs where they have no place to go beyond that."

One of the focus group participants was working at a tribal childcare agency on one of the reservations. She worked 40 hours per week at a wage of seven dollars per hour, with the exception of limited overtime for which she received time and a half She had been working at the childcare agency for a month, but the position was temporary. A permanent position has opened up though, and she is applying for that position. As to this opportunity, the focus group participant stated, "I have a good shot at this position because I am already there." Once she becomes a permanent employee she is eligible for employee benefits. She received her current job while training through JTPA to be a travel agent. She is pleased to currently work with children, however she may look into a job as a travel agent in the future.

Another participant faced significant barriers to finding work experience. She has health problems that made employers wary about hiring her. According to this participant, due to a variety of health problems, "a lot of which were stress-related," there was a "gap between her training and work experience." She also stated that her original work experience placement employer "got scared or something. They didn't want to continue my contract." However, she recently received placement through JTPA at the Health and Human Services office on her reservation. She will receive seven dollars per hour, which is paid by JTPA. According to her, she "enjoys working in the health field and has a lot of experience", and is pleased with her placement. Her job requires her to drive so she is currently reapplying for her driver's license. The JTPA service provider noted that "this position will open for a permanent position as well. We always ask if a permanent position will open for the client."

One of the participants was trying to enhance her basic skills so she can eventually go to school at a community college. She is attending Basic English and math modules. Her employer encourages her education by allowing four hours of paid leave, once she is a permanent employee, to attend her modules. The training center and her workplace are a few minutes away from each other by bus, which further encourages her education. The education department pays her $50 for each module she completes, which is yet another incentive. This participant hopes to eventually receive an Associates degree in child development.

Another participant was currently attending JTPA for training. She once attended college to receive a Law degree, but her education was disrupted by family problems. She is interested in Law because she would like to work with the Indian Community to counteract injustice towards Indians.

J. Basic necessities

Another barrier to work faced by reservation residents is the lack of basic necessities (e.g., telephones, food, fuel and clothing). Of all the focus group participants interviewed, only a few had telephones. Participants expressed the dilemma this posed when potential employers asked them to provide, not only their own phone numbers, but also the phone numbers of references on job applications. Potential employers request three reference letters or three names of people with telephones whom they can contact for references. They also ask for the telephone number of the applicant. Employers are reluctant to hire people they cannot reach by phone.

Although data on income was not collected, focus group participants provided anecdotal information regarding the economic hardships they experienced. Most of them reported lacking basic household supplies at the end of each month, including food, fuel and clothing. Most participants reported never buying anything for themselves, only for their children. One woman said, "I haven't bought clothes for myself in three or four years." Another woman said her parents still bought her clothes. Many reported that their children wear "hand-me-downs." In some communities, residents still rely on wood-fuel for heating their homes. One woman reported, "The money I get from welfare is not enough to cover rent and butane. My fuel runs out and we have to sit in the house with blankets over us." Lack of basic necessities makes it incredibly difficult for recipients to care for their families and effectively pursue employment at the same time.

K. Individual and family problems

Some focus group members reported having children with health and behavioral problems, hardships which make it difficult to work and find childcare. Two focus group participants were grandmothers caring for their daughters' children because their daughters were no longer living in the home. In addition, according to both Tribal Social Service Providers and focus group participants, alcoholism is a problem in many of the communities. As one Tribal Social Service Provider said, "Alcohol abuse is a big problem here. It impacts employment, parenting, violence, suicides, crime, and other things." One focus group participant expressed her problems with alcohol and employment: "For 12 years I was employed by this tribe. I had everything. But alcoholism took its toll and landed me on my knees. I lost my house, I lost my car, and I almost lost my children due to neglect." She later received treatment through the tribe's behavioral health service program and reports that she is now in her third year of sobriety. Problems reported by focus groups provide a glimpse of the nature of problems poor families with children face on reservations.

L. Stereotypes and discrimination

In some communities, Tribal Social Service Providers and focus group participants were aware that due to gender issues, ethnicity, or personal and family histories, TANF recipients were often discriminated against by employers. Many focus group participants felt that employers discriminate against women, especially single mothers One respondent said, "Women have the right to work – single women and mothers included." Another respondent said that employers think "women are too much trouble " Many respondents perceived these attitudes in employers on and off reservations In towns and cities outside the reservations, Tribal Social Service Providers and focus group participants perceived that American Indians were stereotyped and discriminated against by some employers. One Tribal Social Service Provider said that in the nearest town many fast food managers did not want to hire American Indians. According to this Provider, "They think we don't know responsibility, commitment, or the work ethic. They think we always have emergencies that take us away from work." A Tribal Social Service provider in another community said, "It's like we have a wall around us. Do TANF recipients have their best chance to find jobs within the Indian community? Perhaps that would be the ideal. It would be less stressful than working outside in the dominant society."

Within communities, personal or family histories of alcoholism were also reported to be barriers to employment. A Tribal Social Service Director said, "Discrimination is a problem here. Once you're labeled as an alcoholic, you have a stigma for life People who know the background of individuals won't hire them. That's the weakness of trying to work within the community." In one of the focus groups, a participant indicated that she was having great difficulties finding a job: "It's because of my background is why they're rejecting me. Because of my name. People think all my family are alcoholics. My father died of alcoholism." Another woman had a similar story: "I've been sober for three years, but no one will hire me because I used to be an alcoholic I'm trying to get back with the rest of the world, but I have been labeled as an alcoholic." She experienced discrimination while seeking employment both on and off the reservation Off the reservation, employers did not believe her transportation was reliable enough because she lived 70 miles away (she had her own vehicle, however, which she felt was reliable). On the reservation, her past experience with substance abuse made many employers refuse to hire her: "It is really hard to climb out of this hole."

M. Survival strategies and success stories

Welfare recipients indicated that many employers are prejudiced against women on welfare due to their minimal education and job experience, lack of telephones, transportation and reliable childcare, and individual or family histories of substance abuse. However, anecdotal evidence suggests that employers who have hired welfare recipients generally have positive experiences working with them. In one community, Tribal Social Service Providers reported success with hiring a welfare recipient for a position in a tribal childcare program. Other Tribal Social Service Providers had hired approximately six TANF recipients. The childcare director in this community hired four TANF recipients as contract workers, but then gave them permanent positions because they performed so well on the job. Two of these former welfare recipients have been working for her for approximately one year The other two have been working for approximately seven to eight months. For all four of these individuals, these positions were their first jobs ever. One of these women had been on public assistance for more than 13 years

Focus group participants also had success stories to share. For example, in one group, four of the five women were no longer receiving welfare. One woman said she had been on welfare "for a long time" and decided to go off about two months ago due to the changes in TANF requirements. Another woman was on AFDC/TANF, but she was cut off last year after not renewing her application. She reports that she was too busy with school and work to reapply. She reported earning more money at work than she got with welfare. To this end, this woman stated, "I want to give my kids someone to look up to. People should work if they can. I was embarrassed being on welfare. People think you're lazy. I wanted to better my future. I'm looking forward to the day I start working. I don't depend on my family. I'm an independent woman." At the time of this statement, she had graduated from a JTPA program and was a finalist for a facilities maintenance job that paid well over minimum wage.

One respondent feels she has "bettered" herself since she found a job. With encouragement from a family member, she has been able to save money. She opened a savings and checking account and began to cut back on unnecessary expenses. According to her, "I am saving a little bit at a time." She feels that her ability to save money would have happened whether or not welfare reform occurred. With the money she has saved, she would like to eventually buy a trailer home.

Another participant who had recently found a job considered herself "more responsible and independent" than when she was on welfare. She was recently separated from her husband and she was struggling as a single parent: "I have been trying to adjust to this for quite some time. It is especially hard with my kids as a single parent." She felt independent, however, by ending a destructive relationship. She earns more than when she was on welfare: "On welfare I got $440 a month, now I get close to $900 a month." This has allowed her to change her spending patterns so that she can better provide for her family. In particular, she noted that she is currently able to buy food and shoes, as well as pay other household bills with less worry than before. Her long-term goals are either to earn a degree in vocational training or move to a nearby city that has greater employment opportunities. Her children perceive her positively since she has been earning her own income through work experience. They also perceive themselves more positively. According to her, "I can see a lot more self-esteem in them." She is preparing her older child for work by enrolling him in a summer youth program.

Another participant has been "just living from month to month." Because the TANF assistance she receives is not adequate, she sacrifices her own well-being so that her children "won't look poor." For example, she saved for some dental work she needed but then her children wanted to attend an end-of-the-year field trip: "It took a long time to save that money. I was sad at first when I gave it to them for the trip, but then when they came home and I saw their happy faces, I knew I did the right thing." Purchasing shoes for her children is a struggle as well. One of her children had holes in the bottom of his shoes. At the time she could not afford new shoes for him. Eventually, she found a pair of shoes for six ($6) dollars. She fears most that her struggles impact her children negatively. She would like to move out of her community because "access is hard and gas is expensive." To change her current situation, she feels she needs "a good job. I don't want to be on welfare but it is hard to get off because your rent will rise and everything else will cost more." Overall, she is happier today because she is sober (recovering from alcohol abuse), but she is financially worse off because TANF does not provide as much as it did before. Her greatest achievement was to receive a tuition scholarship from a four-year college: "That was really a plus."

A participant is experiencing difficulties in convincing her husband that he, as well as she, must actively seek employment or participation in education and training in order to maintain their benefits. "My husband won't take part in what I want him to do. I want him to work. Instead I'm the one that's doing it." This misunderstanding has led to many arguments between her and her husband. He refuses to seek work or attend training. The State will sanction her benefits by 25 percent (and 50, 75 and 100 percent as times goes on) if he does not comply with the welfare regulations. This is not an isolated occurrence. Service providers have noticed that "many American Indian women receiving AFDC-UP are more aggressive than their husbands in adhering to the work requirements because they worry about their children. This may result in separating a family." This participant is hoping to move to a nearby city for the summer to find employment. She plans to take her children with her.

The other respondent had to put school on hold in order to be with her grandchildren while their parents were going through a divorce. "I am just now getting back on my feet, but the kids demand more from me now that I am at home." She was studying to become a lawyer, yet has since entered the health field. She misses school a lot: "I was really happy in school. It was a fun time. I'd like to go back." Currently, she is having a hard time making ends meet: "I was doing fine before. I was paying my own bills and everything. Once I took over my home [returned home to take care of my grandchildren] and got only $173 a month, I haven't been able to make it. I need one of my sons to get a job and help me out."

N. Change in Community Social Conditions

To understand change in community social conditions under welfare reform we relied on the individual perceptions and comments of focus group participants, as well as on aggregate data. Focus group participants indicated that they noticed an increase in the numbers of persons seeking employment on the reservation, but not necessarily the number of persons finding employment: "There is a lack of jobs." According to a focus group participant, drinking and drug abuse have been on the rise among welfare recipients, youth and elderly. There has also been an increase in the presence of drugs at local schools. All in all, participants felt that welfare reform will only exacerbate these conditions on reservations. One participant noted that, in the long run, it is necessary to have support services that compliment welfare reform, otherwise it will not succeed: "If you have people who are willing and able to help, then things will get better, and this is the responsibility of the government. We need government support because they are the ones making the changes."

Focus group participants have noticed various problems in their communities which need to be addressed. One such area is police protection for vandalism and other crimes, such as spray paint, broken windows, fires, and stolen cars. There is frustration with the slow response by the police to such incidences. Drug and alcohol abuse are problems as well. Sniffing paint and other drug use has become especially popular among younger children. At least one focus group participant noted that "it's really bad."

We also retrieved and analyzed social and economic data at the community level using the census 1990, BIA data and the aggregate data obtained from the DES. While much of the aggregate data obtained from the BIA have yet to be analyzed, we have information on census 1990 (see Tables 4-7) and the TANF enrollment (see Tables 10-11) from tribes within Arizona. Even though nearly a decade old, the census data provide an overview of the social and economic conditions of these tribes. The TANF enrollment data, on the other hand, are more recent and document the welfare trends on reservations.

Trends in TANF enrollment by reservations

In order to monitor trends in TANF program use by reservation, we analyzed data obtained from the state Department of Economic Security, Phoenix for 17 reservations. For these reservations we obtained the following data: number of households and number of individuals receiving TANF between January 1995 and January 1998 (see Table 10).

We looked at the percentage changes between the number of households and individuals receiving TANF in January of 1995 and in January of 1998. Like the states, reservations within Arizona also experienced a decline in the number of households and individuals (13 percent change) receiving TANF from January 1995 to January 1998 (see table 10), but for reservations the rate of decline was less rapid. During the same period, households and individuals among non-reservation TANF recipients within Arizona declined by 44 percent while the state of Arizona, which includes reservation and non-reservation TANF recipients, experienced a decline of 41 percent.

This data shows that seven tribes are nearly welfare independent. The TANF households of these seven tribes range from zero to six (Ak-Chin, Cocopah, Fort McDowell, Fort Mojave, Havasupai, Kaibab Paiute, and Yavapai Apache). It is important to note that for tribes with smaller numbers of households and individuals receiving TANF, percentage changes are not an informative measure.

Four tribes had an increase in the number of households receiving TANF: Colorado River (235 percent), Hualapai (127 percent), Pasqua Yaqui (74 percent) and San Carlos (9 percent) between January 1995 and January 1998. Colorado River had a substantial increase (235 percent)— from 23 households in January of 1995 to 77 households in January of 1998.

The remaining six tribes had decreases in both the number of households and number of individuals receiving TANF: Gila River, Hopi, Navajo Nation, Tohono O'Odham and White Mountain Apache. Substantial decreases were experienced by two tribes: Gila River (from 631 households and 1,916 individuals in January 1995 to 343 households and 1,099 individuals in January 1998) and Tohono O'odham (from 612 households and 1,693 individuals in January 1995 to 474 households and 1,402 individuals January 1998).

With regards to sanctions, some families on reservations in Arizona have experienced sanctions (see table 11). Between January of 1998 and January of 1999, 623 cases or 9.03 percent of Arizona's total reservation based TANF cases (as of January 1998) were sanctioned 25 percent, indicating that these cases lost 25 percent of their cash assistance. During the same time, a total of 517 cases (7.50 percent) were sanctioned 50 percent, losing 50 percent of their cash benefit while 382 cases (5.54 percent) were closed due to sanctions resulting in a 100 percent loss of the cash benefit.

With regards to time limit, the state of Arizona waived the two-year EMPOWER time limit for all reservations with 50 percent or higher proportion of adults not employed.[29] As a result, a very small proportion of the TANF recipients (193 adult recipients) from reservations has been removed from the TANF program due to a two-year EMPOWER time limit between January of 1998 and January of 1999 (see table 11). These recipients (193 adult recipients) make up less than one percent of the total TANF recipients on reservations as of January 1998. Ninety percent of these recipients were from reservations that were ineligible for a two-year EMPOWER time limit waiver (i.e., these reservations had at least 50 percent adults employed). The remaining 10 percent of recipients were from reservations that were eligible for a waiver (i.e., these reservations had less than 50 percent adults employed).

[29] The state of Arizona used the Bureau of Indian Affairs' 1995 estimate of the percentage of adult American Indians on reservations that are not employed to waive two-year EMPOWER time limit.

Throughout the 1990s, devolution--or entrusting local levels of government to reflect their own attitudes, imagination and insight in the design and administration of social welfare services--has gained increasing attention. In 1996 the 104th Congress devolved TANF programmatic authority from the federal government to the states. Supporters of devolution argue that governmental units that are closer to the people (whether state or local) are more knowledgeable about the tribes. As a result, these governmental units are positioned to respond to people's needs and challenges with greater imagination and insight (Borut, 1996; Buckley, 1996; Kingsley, 1996). The federal government is perceived as bureaucratic, inefficient and distant in terms of providing the welfare needs of people. Those who oppose devolution contend that block granting of welfare programs to states is based on inaccurate premises and will hurt the poor and the nation at large (Caraley, 1996; 1998; Donahue, 1997; Goldberg, 1996; Kuttner, 1995; Steuerle & Mermin, 1997; Weaver, 1996). Still others have mixed views regarding the merits of devolution of welfare programs to the states (Gold, 1996; Nathan, 1997; The Economist, January 3, 1998).

In this report, however, we take the stand that devolution of power from federal and state to tribal governments is advantageous—not because we concur with the arguments used by supporters of devolution, but because it is in line with tribal self-rule (see also Pandey et al , in press). Historically, tribes have consistently sought to gain tribal sovereignty in the administration of social services. Also, in the current political climate, the federal government is unlikely to reverse the block grant approach or enlarge poverty alleviation programs at the federal level in the near future. In other words, devolution of administrative authority from federal government to states and tribal governments is here to stay for the time being. The tribes, witnessing devolution at the tribal level, are taking it seriously. Navajo Nation, for example, recently passed the Local Governance Act of 1998, which gives tribal chapters the authority to take action within their chapters to make welfare reform work. With this act, chapters may focus on economic development within their own community.

Incremental changes that will cure some of the deficiencies in the existing policies are likely to occur. Within this context we highlight some of the weaknesses of the current legislation and suggest remedies within the current policy framework. We conclude this section indicating that the 1996 welfare legislation has indeed increased communication, cooperation, and collaboration within tribes, among tribes, between tribes and states and between tribes and the federal government.

Challenges to Development through Devolution

The 1996 welfare reform legislation was based on the assumption that states are better positioned than the federal government to understand local conditions and to respond to local needs with innovative strategies, greater imagination and insight (Corbett, 1997) If devolution of power from the federal to the state level is a more effective means of delivering public assistance, then it is only logical to think that tribal governments situated closer to the problems are better positioned to understand and respond to tribal challenges Tribal governments are, thus, better positioned to design suitable programs for their needy populations than the state. To this effect, tribes have begun examining issues that they need to address under welfare reform. Priorities may vary from one reservation to the next. For instance, a critical issue for tribal members of the San Carlos reservation, which has a high unemployment rate, was job development, whereas at Salt River (located in the outskirts of Phoenix) issues of job placement and retention were more important.

Welfare reform has given Tribal Social Service Providers new opportunities to examine federal and state policy. This opportunity allows them to make their own decisions about what is best for their communities. The federal government has also given flexibility to tribes so that each tribe can determine its own service populations, definitions of family, types of assistance, job participation rates and time limitations. Developing TANF services that are sensitive to the cultural values and practices of their tribes has been a top priority for Tribal Social Service Providers. Because welfare reform gives tribes the option to run their own programs for the first time, it represents a fresh opportunity to design culturally appropriate welfare-to-work programs. Also, under PRWORA tribes are shifting their attention from rehabilitation to long-term development.

Tribes may design innovative poverty alleviation programs and respond to local challenges with greater imagination and insight. Some programs may even become models for other tribes in the nation. It is in the interest of the state and the federal government to remove tribal constraints against self-governance. The states and the federal government can promote tribal self-governance by easing some of their constraints as follows:

Federal support

Tribes are aware that flexibility to design and administer a tribal TANF program involves the responsibility to alleviate poverty and change behavior of current or former welfare recipients. Not all tribes within Arizona are positioned to undertake a task of this magnitude. Most Tribal Governments lack technical expertise and financial resources. Devolution, in the true sense of the word, does not necessarily mean that lower-level governments should do more work with less money. However, this is how the block granting of welfare services is currently set up. Providing financial and technical resources to those tribes with plans to self-administer TANF will not only reduce tribes' constraints to administer TANF, but it may also enhance job opportunities and skills among tribal members. Otherwise, "flexibility without resources may not be flexibility at all" (Corbett, 1997, p. 5).

If the intent is to help tribes become self-reliant, then perhaps funds should be made available to encourage their self-reliance not only at the individual level, but also at the institutional level. One way to build tribal institutional structures is to provide support costs so that tribes can gain experience in service implementation. Navajo Nation's TANF administration proposal creatively requests support costs to administer TANF within the framework of existing federal law (U.S. Congress, 1975, P.L. 93-638).

State-match

Providing state matching funds to tribes with TANF plans that are approved by DHHS is a step in the right direction. State matching funds promote the devolution of power from states to tribes. Yet, as noted earlier, only a few states in the nation have agreed to do so. Further, as noted elsewhere (Pandey et al., 1998), tribal welfare recipients face barriers to employment that are difficult to remove. States should reward tribes that are willing to undertake a task of such enormity with generous matching funds.

Incentives for "positive" outcomes

If it is good policy to encourage states to reduce welfare caseloads, unwed births and teen pregnancies, perhaps the same logic should be applied to tribes who administer their own TANF programs. In other words, tribes should also be rewarded for "good" outcomes, just like the states.

Coordination, collaboration, and communication

Under the 1996 federal welfare legislation, both states and tribes find it advantageous to enter into intergovernmental agreements to ensure the coordination and provision of TANF and related services. The legislation has strengthened coordination, communication and collaboration at all levels—among Tribal Social Service Providers, among tribes, between tribes and states, and between tribes and the federal government. At the tribal level, for instance, coordination, collaboration, and communication have increased between staff of social services, employment training, childcare, education and other departments. An increase in coordination, communication, and collaboration is a positive early effect of TANF legislation and may, in the future, improve tribes' efforts to serve families with children.

Decline in Welfare Caseloads

Nationwide, welfare caseloads have been declining rapidly. The rate of caseload decline on reservations in Arizona is slower than the national rate. A decline in the number of families on welfare may result in a budget surplus at the state or tribal level. At the same time, poverty and hardship at the individual or family level may be rising (Dodson, Joshi, McDonald, 1998; Sherman, Amey, Duffield, Ebb, Weinstein, 1998; Stromwall, Brzuzy, Sharp, Andersen, 1998). A longitudinal study is needed to understand the survival strategies of low-income women with children on reservations.

Barriers to employment and training

Many women residing on Arizona's reservations and receiving public assistance have been waived, for the time being, from some of the requirements of the TANF block grant. Waivers have been granted due to high unemployment rates. Still, there is evidence that the new federal welfare policy has motivated many women on reservations to quit the welfare program, or to find training and employment that they hope will lead to better economic security for their families in the future. Demand for educational and training services has increased since Arizona began implementing the EMPOWER program as a part of its TANF block grant in 1995. Demand for support services (e.g., childcare and transportation) has also increased. Welfare reform may give some women the opportunity to increase their human capital, but it will only do so if childcare and educational/training programs are adequate. Barriers to employment on reservations are similar to the barriers to employment nationally. However, these barriers are magnified on reservations.

Support services

Transportation is a major problem in rural America, especially on reservations. Most women we interviewed did not own a car. Those who owned vehicles did not own reliable vehicles. One woman who owns a car said that it "just went out, for the fourth time." Most participants reported borrowing their relatives' or friends' vehicles and paying for gas. While some tribes have community transportation systems, due to restricted routes and distant destinations, these systems do not appear to be adequate for regular employment. In addition, except for emergency medical purposes, oftentimes these transportation systems run at certain times and not at others.

Childcare services are severely inadequate and under-funded in meeting the needs of welfare recipients on most reservations within the state of Arizona. This finding is consistent with the findings of interviews with welfare recipients and low-wage workers not living on reservations (Edin & Lein, 1997). An inadequate supply of childcare slots for children of different age groups is compounded by the nonstandard work schedules of mothers on welfare (Porterfield & McBride, 1997; Presser & Cox, 1997; Smith, 1995). The General Accounting Office (GAO) reports that in sites they studied, only 12 to 35 percent of childcare providers offered services during nonstandard hours (U.S. GAO, 1997: 15).

Under the 1996 federal welfare legislation, tribes may receive up to two percent of the Child Care Development Fund at the discretion of the secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS). Even though two percent of the total fund may sound like a substantial amount of money for the nation's reservation population of .32 percent (total reservation population according to 1990 Census = 808,163), when one considers the magnitude of the problem, it is not. At the tribal level, the lack of childcare is a major problem. One community has 80 childcare slots and 60 on the waiting list. All focus group participants relied on family, friends and neighbors for childcare support. Such network support is likely to be more effective if the need is intermittent. However, this support is likely to subside under the new welfare reform, since these women must have access to regular childcare service in order to participate in employment.

Basic necessities

Basic necessities such as access to communication networks (e.g., telephone and fax), as well as the possession of decent clothing, are necessary to find and retain a job. Most welfare mothers on reservations did not have access to a telephone or a fax machine. This problem is not likely to be solved immediately. Most tribes do not have the resources and infrastructure to provide these services to all families on reservations. Something will have to be done to resolve this deficiency. One option might be to provide resources to tribes to install and maintain community telecommunication systems, i.e. shared telephones and fax machines for a community of 10 households. Lack of food, fuel and clothing is probably an easier problem to resolve, and may be resolved once the adult member of a family is employed.

Education and job experience

Low levels of education and a lack of work experience are barriers to employment on reservations. These barriers are consistent with those experienced by many welfare mothers nationally (Pavetti, 1997; Pavetti & Acs, 1997; Sandefur & Cook, 1997). Compared to urban areas, rural areas in general will have more difficulty implementing welfare-to-work programs. (Goetz & Freshwater, 1997). In addition, reservations have an even bigger challenge due to high poverty rates and severe shortages of employment opportunities at the lower rungs of the economic order. Even though Tribal Social Service Providers have noted an increase in the demand for education and vocational training programs, especially from individuals that have very limited job related skills, they are not hopeful that these women will find jobs on reservations. Also, funding is inadequate for the introduction of economic development programs and for training and job preparation (e.g., GED preparation).

Employment opportunities

It is important to note that the economic conditions of Indian communities across the nation vary greatly. Within Arizona alone, several tribes are essentially welfare independent. These tribes have economic opportunities (e.g., casinos, resorts or other developments) within or near the reservations. In contrast, there are other tribes with extremely high unemployment rates, with very few job possibilities and few support services. The shortage of employment opportunities is the biggest problem on reservations. Reducing dependency on public assistance by promoting training and employment will be a difficult task in communities without strong economic development components and support systems (for childcare and transportation).

To increase employment opportunities on reservations, tribal members will have to attract not only federal and state monies, but private monies as well. Even though tribes have mixed feelings about private development in their communities, this is an area worth investigating, especially at a time when federal responsibility for local development is dwindling.

Individual and family problems

Nationally, recent studies of welfare-to-work programs have indicated that a significant proportion of recipients experience individual and family problems (e.g., mental health problems, substance abuse, domestic violence, poor child health, child behavior problems and legal problems) (DeParle, 1997; Holcomb, Pavetti, Ratchiffe, and Riedinger, 1998; Pavetti, 1997; Pavetti & Acs, 1997). These problems can interfere with their ability to find or retain jobs or participate in training activities. Many poor families on reservations share the same challenges (e.g., alcohol and substance abuse, mental illness). These families need programs that address these challenges. Funding is inadequate for not only training and job preparation, but also for substance abuse treatment programs.

VII. CONCLUSION

The 1996 federal welfare legislation is designed to reduce welfare dependency and poverty simultaneously by emphasizing the devolution of welfare implementation from federal to local governmental units, and by emphasizing changes in the behavior and attitudes of poor families with children. This report provides some initial evidence of the impact of the 1996 welfare law on reservations. It also reveals how American Indian families are surviving. We document some of the initial accomplishments of the 1996 federal welfare legislation.

A historical review of social welfare polices and services to American Indians indicate that American Indians are different from other U.S. citizens in that they have citizenship status with the federal and state governments, yet as tribal members, they also share in a unique federal-Indian relationship. The federal-Indian relationship is based upon treaties, acts of Congress, and presidential directives, which recognize tribes as sovereign entities. This dual relationship complicates policy making for American Indian social services because American Indians have rights based both on their citizenship and the special "federal trust responsibility." Although state governments have historically tried to exert control over tribal communities, recent federal legislation, including the PRWORA, have granted more independence and flexibility. With this new freedom, tribes can design and implement their own social service programs on reservations. The option for tribes to administer their own TANF programs has been praised as an example of the "government-to-government" relationship between tribes and the federal government.

There is a lot of interest among tribes in Arizona as well as in tribes in other states to self-administer TANF. Thus far, the DHHS has approved the Plans of 19 Indian Tribal Organizations. Three of these 19 Tribal Organizations are in Arizona. Several other Arizona tribes expect to have a plan developed within the next few years. Tribes that have elected to stay with the state-administered TANF program are either gathering information relevant to positioning themselves to self-administer TANF, or are disinterested because they are nearly "welfare independent," i.e. that have very few welfare recipients. Also, as a result of this legislation, communication, collaboration and cooperation among different units, i.e. within tribes, between tribes, between tribes and states and between tribes and the federal government, have increased.

However, as tribes begin to develop plans for self-administration of TANF programs, they are noticing the legislation's limitations. In particular, they are noticing the lack of state matching funds, support costs, start-up money and federal rewards for "successful" work. Tribal leaders and Social Service Providers are concerned that the devolution of responsibility for TANF administration without commensurate allocation of financial resources to the tribes may render the policy ineffective. Above all, this concern has slowed tribal takeover of TANF programs.

Like states, reservations in Arizona have experienced a decline in the welfare caseload, but at a slower rate. Generally, all of the women and Tribal Social Service Providers whom we interviewed agreed that women on welfare prefer to work. A few reservations within Arizona are nearly welfare independent. For these reservations, independence is due to economic opportunities on or near reservations. It is important to note that the economic success of families depends greatly on the geographic location of the reservation, the condition of its roadways and the employment opportunities that residents can access. In remote areas, the lack of jobs, paved roads, transportation and communication make it impossible for many residents to get to work. This creates a great amount of stress and anguish for many women who want to provide a decent way of life for their children. On some reservations we may begin to notice a greater level of disruption of these families' lives, primarily because lack of transportation and communication will force many people to leave the tribal land to be closer to urban areas with jobs.

We anticipate that the impact of the 1996 federal welfare legislation on families with children will vary depending upon a wide variety of individual, family and structural factors. Families' survival strategies will also vary over time and must be studied to understand the occurrence of any tangential conditions such as malnutrition and other health hazards among women and children. Finally, it is important to understand the extent to which policies, such as the 1996 welfare legislation, designed to emphasize work, and changes in reproductive and parenting behavior, will help families attain these goals on reservations.

[i] We conducted focus group interviews with residents of three Indian communities (Navajo, Salt River and San Carlos Apache) who were current or former TANF recipients. There were 19 respondents altogether: nine (47 percent) from the Navajo tribe, six (32 percent) from the Salt River tribe, and four (21 percent) from the San Carlos Apache tribe. The average age of the respondents was 32. The lowest age reported was 20, and the highest was 45. Two respondents were divorced (11 percent), two were living with a partner (11 percent), four were married (22 percent), four were separated (22 percent), and six were single (33 percent). One respondent did not provide her marital status. The average number of years completed in school was 11. The highest number of years completed in school was 16; this respondent had completed a college degree. Two respondents had only completed eight years of schooling (the lowest number of grades completed). Respondents reported an average of four children. Many respondents had one child only. One respondent had 14 children, the highest number reported. The reported ages of the women's children ranged from one to 20, with an average age of nine. Respondents reported an average of five people living in their households. The average number of persons over 18 years of age was two per household. The average length of time reportedly spent on welfare was five years. Two respondents reported spending one year on welfare (the shortest time period reported). One respondent reported spending 18 years on welfare. Two respondents did not provide this information. In summary, these women tended to have low levels of education and young children at home. There was a lot of variability in the number of years they had received public assistance.

At our second visit (May,1998) four (out of nine) recipients who participated in the January focus group were unable to participate in the May focus group. One recipient graduated from the Arizona Institute of Business and Technology with an Associates degree and was working for the Division of Youth and Community Services. Her job was temporary, but she received a salary of 20,000 dollars. Another, who had one been a long term TANF recipient, had finished her basic education classes and had found employment at a restaurant working 40 hours per week at minimum wage. Although she has a GED, she would like more training. She currently lives with relatives because she cannot find stable housing. Another recipient missed her ride to the training center where the focus group was held. "She lives in a remote area where transportation is a barrier." Usually she hitchhikes to get to her basic education class. She is currently unemployed. Finally, one recipient had a conflicting schedule that prohibited her from attending the focus group. This recipient attends GED classes, to which her parents drive her.

Question 1. As I understand it, states are eligible to receive incentives for good performance under TANF grant guidelines, but often use tribal numbers to enhance their award. Can you explain how this happens? Are these awards available to tribes?

Response: Under the current TANF grant guidelines, when states receive incentives for good performance (reducing caseloads, unwed births, and teen pregnancies), they are not required to share the incentives with tribes with good performance records within their states. Also, on their own, tribes with good performance records are not eligible for any incentives from the federal government or the state. With regards to states benefiting through the use of tribal numbers, hypothetically, states may be rewarded when tribes reduce their TANF caseload. This may happen in two ways where the state is rewarded but the tribes do not benefit:

a. Should tribal governments reduce TANF caseload by introducing economic development activities on their reservations and increasing employment of TANF recipients, a state's TANF recipients employment figures will look better. This could theoretically improve a state's chances of receiving incentives. But the tribes that worked hard to train and employ TANF recipients are not eligible to share any portion of that award. It is important to remember that if a tribe's TANF caseload remains the same or increases then it could have a reverse effect on a state's caseload.

b. If a tribe makes per capita payments from economic development activities at a level that disqualifies its members from TANF benefits, then essentially that tribe's total TANF caseload drops. This drop in the TANF caseload on a reservation in turn reflects as a drop in TANF caseload at the state level thereby contributing to award eligibility at the state level. But the tribe that absorbed welfare caseload by making higher per capita payments is not qualified to receive any portion of an award to the state. Several tribes within Arizona are nearly TANF independent with very few TANF cases on their reservations. For example, as of January 1998, seven tribes in Arizona (Ak-Chin, Cocopah, Fort McDowell, Fort Mojave, Havasupai, Kaibab Paiute and Yavapai Apache) have less than seven households receiving TANF. Five tribes (Ak-Chin, Cocopah, Fort McDowell, Fort Mojave and Yavapai Prescott) have either employment opportunities or tribal per capita payments (due to economic development opportunities within or near reservations), which disqualify families for receipt of other welfare assistance (e.g., TANF, Tribal General Assistance).

Question 2. What recommendations do you have for amendments to the present law which would lead to more effective TANF programs for tribes?

We recommend that Section 412 of PRWORA be amended to encompass the following:

a. Legislation to promote economic development on reservations. Exit from TANF and economic independence of families on reservations depends greatly upon the geographic location of a reservation, the condition of its roadways and the employment opportunities that residents can access. Many TANF recipients live on isolated reservations with high unemployment rates and few jobs in the lower rungs of the economic ladder. On these reservations, the success of TANF relies upon tribes' ability to create jobs. Under PRWORA, funds have not been set aside for job creation. While some TANF dollars may be used for economic development activities, it would be impossible to shift TANF monies for economic development on reservations where welfare caseloads have remained the same or increased. Legislation encouraging private investment on reservations through tax incentives (federal, state, or both) is crucial for promoting the economic development and job creation on reservations. Currently, investors receive Employment Tax Credit for every tribal member employed. This is a step in the right direction, but needs more expansion. A generous federal tax cut to those companies who start or relocate businesses on reservations would attract private investors to explore investment options on reservations and potentially create much needed job opportunities on reservations. Also, an expansion of current Empowerment Zone Law addressing the needs of tribes would strengthen economic development on reservations.

b. Provide additional funding for support services and job preparation. There is a severe lack of support services (transportation, childcare and job training) for poor families on reservations (see Pandey, et al, 1999). Under the 1996 federal welfare legislation, tribes may receive up to two percent of the Child Care Development Fund at the discretion of the secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS). Even though two percent of the total fund may sound like a substantial amount of money for the nation's reservation population of 0.32 percent (total reservation population according to 1990 Census = 808,163), when one considers the magnitude of the gap in childcare, it is not. Most poor families rely on family, friends and neighbors for childcare support. Such network support is effective if the need is intermittent. However, this support is being strained under the new welfare reform, since these women must have access to regular childcare service in order to participate in employment. Further, only 30 percent of women on welfare own a vehicle. A substantial percentage of TANF recipients do not have a high school degree (84 percent) nor have ever worked for pay (53 percent). Therefore, for TANF to succeed on reservations, additional funding for support services and job preparation is critical.

c. Provide state matching grants to tribes. We think that state matching grants are critical for tribes to self-administer TANF services. As we point out in our study, of the 19 Indian Organizations that are self-administering TANF, 13 are within states that have volunteered to pay state matching funds (see Pandey, et al, 1999). The other tribes have a smaller number of recipients (20-75 families receiving TANF). If the states are reluctant to provide matching funds, federal government should provide an equivalent of the state matching funds.

d. Provide start-up funds to tribes who apply for Tribal Family Assistance Grant. Tribes need start up funds to strengthen their infrastructure to self-administer TANF services. Without start up funds it is organizationally impossible, especially for larger tribes, to self-administer TANF services. We think that tribes should be allowed to use P.L. 93-638 (which entitle tribes to receive program support funds) to administer TANF services.

e. Allow tribes to keep unexpended TANF funds for future use. Currently, states are allowed to keep unexpended TANF funds for future (unlimited time) use, but tribes must return any unexpended federal funds to the federal government within two years. Tribes should be able to save and use the unexpended funds for future emergencies.

f. Provide funds to evaluate performance. When PRWORA was passed, a limited amount of funding was set aside to evaluate the performance. As a result, not all states have received federal dollars for evaluating their performance. This funding is scarce at the tribal level. Tribes implementing their own TANF services within a state may not receive any money to evaluate their performance. We suggest that money for performance evaluation be made available to tribes so they can assess their program effectiveness.

g. Provide federal rewards for "successful" work. States receive incentives for reducing caseloads, unwed births and teen pregnancies, whereas tribes do not receive any incentives, even when they are able to make reductions in the same areas. If it is good policy to encourage states to reduce welfare caseloads, unwed births, and teen pregnancies, perhaps the same logic should be applied to tribes who administer their own TANF programs. In other words, tribes should also be rewarded for positive outcomes, just like the states.

Question 3. My staff has compiled an agency-by-agency list of all the programs that are eligible for inclusion into the "477" program. Do you support the large-scale widening of "477" for purposes of services delivery to welfare recipients?

Response: Yes, we support widening of "P.L. 102-477." Developing TANF administration plans under P.L. 102-477 allows tribes to combine funds from different sources (training, education and social services) into one funding stream. This will save paper work and administrative costs to tribes.

Question 4. Are you supportive of what the National Congress of American Indians has developed in terms of amendments to the Welfare Reform Act?

Response: Of the 14 amendments the NCAI had proposed, the following amendments have been included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (P.L. 105-33):

2. Availability of TANF loans to Indian Tribes
4. Disregard of the 60-month time limit on Tribal TANF benefits
6. Cooperative agreements with states over Child Support Enforcement
7. Direct Funding for Tribal Child Support Enforcement Programs
9. State Option to Exclude Tribal Work Program Participants
12. Tribal Retro Cession

In the following, we provide our views on the proposed amendments that have yet to be addressed:

1. Supplemental Funds for Tribal TANF programs: We support this amendment (see our responses to Question 2). Currently, reservations within states that do not provide state-matching funds and receive less funds to operate tribal TANF plans compared to the amount the state spent on the same population under AFDC.

3. Tribal Development Fund: We testified in support of this amendment (See our responses to Question 2).

5. Tribal Determination of BIA/GA program payment levels: We agree with the proposed amendment. The BIA/GA services are the last safety net for poor families on reservations. Local flexibility falls within the current framework of devolution of power, and should be strengthened so that tribes can better serve those tribal members who are unable, through no fault of their own, to meet TANF requirements.

7. Direct Funding of Tribal Child Support Enforcement Programs: We did not address this issue in our testimony. However, we strongly support this legislative action and encourage quick promulgation of regulations and release of funds.

8. Assurance of Equal Consultation with Tribes over State Plans: The current law requires comment period (45 days) for a state plan. However, specific strategies are not in place to ensure that tribes receive, review and provide their comments on such plans during the comment period. As a result, tribes are often left out of this process. We believe strategies to enhance tribal input would be useful given that tribal governments must determine whether to administer TANF services.

10. Reporting Requirements for Tribal TANF Programs: This amendment will provide flexibility to tribal governments that do not have necessary infrastructure needed for expedited reporting systems. Another option is to provide additional funding to strengthen tribes' infrastructure so that they can meet their reporting requirements.

11. Tribal Inclusion in Secretary's National TANF Program Studies: This is a very important amendment (See responses to Question 2 above). We included in our testimony and we support research funding for tribes.

13. Equitable Assistance to Indians under State TANF Plans: This amendment will help ensure that the tribes are equitably served. A monitoring procedure should be in place to ensure that Indian individuals are equitably served.

14. Tribal Appeals: If the appeals process over adverse actions by the Secretary is available to the states, then it should also be provided for tribes.

THE IMPLEMENTATION OF WELFARE REFORM IN INDIAN COUNTRY AND RECOMMENDATIONS FOR AMENDMENTS

TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

APRIL 26, 1999

The California Indian Manpower Consortium, Inc. (CIMC) is pleased to have this opportunity to provide comments for consideration by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. Included in this testimony are our observations regarding the effects of welfare reform in Indian Country as well as recommendations for changes in the welfare laws that we feel are essential if welfare programs are to work for Indian people in this country.

CIMC is a private, nonprofit organization that was established in 1978. Through its programs, CIMC strives for the social welfare, educational and economic advancement of its member tribes, groups, organizations, Indians, and other Native Americans living in the State of California.

Under a grant through the Administration for Native Americans in the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, CIMC has been providing information dissemination and strategy development regarding tribal TANF programs to the tribes in California, Arizona, and Nevada since late 1997. Valuable information has been provided to tribes in the three states and opportunities have been afforded for tribes and states to discuss and coordinate around the welfare reform legislation. CIMC also has participated in national tribal welfare reform forums.

In addition, CIMC has been an operator of a Tribal Native Employment Works (NEW) Program, formerly the Tribal Job Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS) Program on behalf of fifty-two tribes in California. More recently, CIMC became an Indian and Native American Welfare-to-Work (INA WtW) Grant Program operator, currently operating on behalf of 83 tribes in the state.

Thus, CIMC has had considerable experience in the welfare reform arena and has had great opportunity to see the effects of the welfare reform legislation enacted in the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-193) and the subsequent amendments enacted in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (P.L. 105-33). Based on these experiences, we offer the following comments and observations.

TRIBAL TANF PROGRAMS

When the welfare reform legislation was enacted, tribes were offered for the first time the opportunity to operate their own TANF programs. While this was a major step for tribes, many resulting issues have overshadowed that opportunity.

Critical in the determination of whether a tribe should operate a tribal TANF program are a number of factors. The most critical factors include: employment opportunities on and near the tribe's service area, the tribe's experience operating similar programs combined with stringent administrative requirements of the welfare program, funding levels based on FY94 activity with no required state match, and current welfare/cash assistance needs of families in the tribe's service area.

First and foremost if the outcomes desired by welfare reform are to be met is the issue of economic development and job creation. Economic development activity is prohibited under many federal grant programs operated by tribes. Yet the need for economic development in Indian Country is extensive if tribal members and others in the tribes' service areas are to become gainfully employed, self-sufficient, and productive members of the community. Without attention being paid to the development of good, sustained, well-paying jobs, no welfare program (whether operated by the tribe or not) can be successful.

The issue of a tribe's previous experience operating similar programs is important for a number of reasons. The timely, smooth transition of welfare recipients from the state to a tribal program will be affected by the tribe's preparation for such an undertaking. If a tribe has had little or no experience with such programs, the time and funding necessary to develop the infrastructure and train staff are critical. Given the fact that tribes have been prohibited in the past from operating such welfare programs, any tribe that chooses to implement a Tribal TANF program will naturally face increased start-up costs as the program is implemented. States have years of experience at operating such programs; it is unfair to penalize tribes for lack of established administrative structures when they have not been allowed to operate these programs in the past.

The funding level, then, becomes a major issue. Inasmuch as the legislation does not mandate state matching funds, many tribes are faced with the decision to operate their tribal TANF programs on funding levels that pale in comparison to the funds available to state programs. Further, although the economy has taken great strides in recent years, this has not been the case on many reservations. Unemployment levels in Indian Country continue to exceed by far the national levels and, without the requisite economic development, the needs of Indian people for assistance through the welfare programs continue.

California Indian Manpower Consortium, Inc.

Other issues related to funding of tribal TANF programs must be addressed as well. While tribes have access to loans for their TANF programs, they still do not have access to contingency funds, bonuses, or funds for technical assistance to develop and enhance their programs. Also, tribes that operate a Tribal TANF program should be allowed the same unlimited carry-over authority provided to states. In fact, it is essential that Tribal TANF programs have such authority, to be available when caseloads increase due to changes in the economy. At a minimum, tribes operating Tribal TANF programs should be allowed to carry over unobligated TANF funds into the succeeding fiscal year. The Administration for Children and Families has a narrow interpretation of what the law allows. Therefore, a technical amendment is essential to give tribes the same ability to reserve grant funds paid in any fiscal year for the purpose of providing TANF assistance without fiscal year limitation.

Given the stringent administrative and operational requirements associated with the tribal TANF program, many tribes are forced to the decision to leave the operation of the TANF program with the state. This leads to other potential problems. Operating a tribal TANF program would allow the tribe to negotiate specific provisions in its plan to meet the tribe's needs and circumstances regarding such issues as work requirements and amount and time limitations on cash assistance payments. When the operation of the TANF program is left with the state, the state TANF requirements must be met by tribal members.

Another important issue is raised in this discussion regarding welfare reform, that of the trust responsibility of the federal government to tribes to meet the health, education, welfare, and social services needs of tribal members. It is no secret that not all tribes have positive relationships with their state governments and state agencies. Tribes that are unable to operate their own TANF program, for whatever reason, are forced to work with the state program to insure that the needs of its members are being addressed and that there is equitable access to the state program provided to tribal members.

It is recommended that consideration be given to the enactment of legislation specific to tribal TANF programs that would provide full funding to such programs, separate and apart from the funding of state welfare programs, at the option of each and every tribe. Such legislation would recognize the federal government's trust responsibility to tribes. It also would enable the tribes to negotiate and operate their own welfare programs at funding levels that meet their needs and circumstances, with adequate and appropriate technical assistance and oversight to move tribal communities to sustained, healthy economies.

The fact that there has been less than 15% of all eligible tribes and Alaska Native villages choosing to implement a tribal TANF program should lead to further investigation into the reasons for such minimal participation. The federal government's trust responsibility to tribes to insure the well-being of tribal members dictates such review to determine the reason for tribes' lack of participation in the TANF program and to insure that the welfare and related social services needs of tribal members are being met.

INDIAN AND NATIVE AMERICAN WELFARE-TO-WORK GRANT PROGRAM

Implementation Issues

The implementation of the WtW program has required WtW grantees (both INA WtW grantees and Private Industry Councils/Service Delivery Areas) to negotiate a memorandum of understanding with the State TANF agency, since the WtW program services are to be provided to TANF recipients. Tribes and tribal organizations that had operated a Tribal Job Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS) Program had the advantage of having already established relationships with the state welfare agency. However, there were additional terms that had to be included in the new MOUs (e.g., verification of long-term receipt of welfare, coordination with welfare agency staff on issues related to work requirements). Tribes and tribal organizations that had not operated Tribal JOBS Programs had to start from scratch on the negotiation process.

As negotiations began with welfare agencies, those same agencies were in the midst of changing from AFDC to TANF operations. Further, they were being approached by PIC/SDA programs to negotiate agreements related to their WtW programs. Thus, the difficulties faced in finalizing MOUs between the various partners were compounded.

For the Indian and Native American (INA) WtW grantees in states such as California, the negotiation of MOUs required that we approach each individual county welfare department. In the case of the CIMC INA WtW Program, in addition to the twenty-two counties in which CIMC operated the Tribal JOBS Program, CIMC had to approach seven counties in which the INA WtW program would be operated as a result of the approval of tribes under the "substantial services" funding. Even with years of experience coordinating with the county welfare departments, the negotiation of the revised MOUs proved a challenge. There still remain counties that are processing the MOU through their county process.

Funding Issues

Historically, there has been insufficient funding for Indian and Native American programs; this has continued with the INA WtW Grant Program. The INA WtW Grant Program is intended to meet the employment and training needs of the hardest-to-serve welfare recipients. When compared with other INA and mainstream employment and training/workforce development programs, costs associated with serving this population naturally would be higher on a per person basis. The training that must be provided as post-employment/job retention services to welfare recipients eligible for the WtW program in general and the INA WtW program in particular will take longer and cost more than for other workforce development program populations.

We are pleased with and fully support the Department of Labor's recommendation that the set-aside for the INA WtW Grant Programs for Fiscal Year 2000 be increased from the current 1% to 3% of the overall funding.

Issues Related to Client Eligibility Criteria

The identification of clients who meet the stringent eligibility requirements of the WtW program has proved difficult. Many individuals who have high school diplomas still have low reading and/or math skills. Considering the high incidence of "social promotions" in elementary and secondary schools, this is not surprising. However, the fact that a recipient has been awarded a high school diploma automatically disqualifies the recipient from qualifying under this criterion.

Therefore, unless the recipient has an as-yet-untreated substance abuse issue, the recipient cannot qualify for services from the WtW program under the hardest-to-serve (70%) category. Unless the recipient is placed in the category of recipient with characteristics associated with long-term welfare dependence (30%), services cannot be provided. With the stringent limitations on dollars that can be spent on the 30% category, INA WtW programs may be faced with refusing services to these recipients, even though they are in dire need of and could most benefit from the program services.

The amendments to client eligibility criteria proposed by DOL will serve to ease restrictions and to allow services to be provided to increased numbers of needy clients.

Work Requirement Issues

It is difficult enough to place recipients in employment positions when jobs that require minimal skills are available. The difficulty securing paid employment for clients is compounded in reservation areas where few employment opportunities exist to start with. Although limited, there still are more opportunities available to place clients initially in non-paid positions at public and private work sites to get the client back into the work environment. If non-paid positions do not qualify as "employment" for purposes of allowing post-employment (i.e., basic skills or job skills training) services to be provided, then many needy clients may go unserved.

It is critical that non-paid as well as paid placements be considered employment, thus enabling post-employment services to be provided to clients to prepare them for paid employment positions and subsequent job retention.

Issues of Remoteness

Even in highly populated states such as California, the recipients to be served by the INA WtW Program are located in some of the most remote areas of the state. The majority of the counties in which the participating tribes are located are rural, with unique issues that must be addressed.

Already discussed is the issue of employment opportunities. In addition, barriers arise related to transportation, child care, training opportunities, and economic development on reservations.

Most urban and suburban areas have ample, adequate public transportation systems. This is not the case in the primarily rural areas where the TANF recipients to be served by the INA WtW Program are located. Most of the recipients do not have personal transportation, to say nothing of reliable personal transportation. They must rely on other means of transportation. In areas where the public transit includes the rural areas, it is most normally very limited service, and not responsive to the work schedules of the passengers. In other areas public transportation is nonexistent.

In remote areas the issues surrounding child care relate primarily to a lack of good, reliable child care providers. When parents do not have adequate child care, their work attendance and performance can suffer.

As discussed, many INA WtW Program clients need to receive basic skills and job skills training as post-employment services. In rural areas there is a notable lack of training opportunities; this is especially true in reservation areas. Therefore, clients need to travel to the nearest training sites, with associated problems related to transportation and child care that must be met.

Finally, as discussed in the previous section regarding the tribal TANF program, the issue of economic development on the reservations in the program service area needs is critical. If support for job creation/economic development activity is not provided, employment opportunities will continue to be limited and the cycle of dependence on welfare programs will not be broken.

Other Issues

Consideration needs to be given to the provision of INA WtW Program services to Indian and Native American TANF recipients in areas where there are no reservation areas. There are many states and/or counties in which there is no reservation but there is a substantial Native American population on TANF.

Set-asides from other funding sources (e.g., Job Training Partnership Act and Community Services Block Grant Programs) allow for the provision of services to the off-reservation Indian and Native American population within the programs' assigned geographic service areas, including states and counties without reservation lands. Such programs still require that the recipients of program services provide documentation of Indian or Alaska Native heritage.

Therefore, during this discussion surrounding the reauthorization of the Welfare-to-Work Grant Program, it is strongly recommended and requested that consideration be given to allowing INA WtW Program services to be provided to Indian and Native American TANF recipients throughout the entire country, rather than limiting eligibility to tribal members in tribes' service areas. Further, it is strongly recommended and requested that the INA WtW Program funding level be increased so that eligibility to receive INA WtW funds can be extended to Indian and Native American organizations in off-reservation areas.

Applicability of Amendments

It is strongly recommended and urged that any amendment made to the Welfare-to-Work legislation, particularly amendments that pertain to client eligibility for program services, apply to all "live" funds that are held by a WtW Grant Program operator. This includes all currently unobligated funds from Fiscal Years 1998 and 1999. To ease eligibility restrictions for only Fiscal Year 2000 funds would not serve to improve the implementation and operation under FY98 & 99 funding.

TRIBAL NATIVE EMPLOYMENT WORKS PROGRAM

It is imperative that the requirement be withdrawn for unobligated fiscal year funds to be returned to the federal government. The restriction that has been placed on tribal JOBS programs in the past and now on tribal NEW programs is unnecessarily restrictive and burdensome. It causes tribes unnecessary difficulty in administering grant funds and encourages poor financial management procedures. Further, it is contrary to rules that apply to other employment and training programs operated by the tribes.

ACF has a narrow interpretation of what the law allows in terms of unobligated funds remaining at the end of the fiscal year. Therefore, a technical amendment is needed to give tribes the ability to reserve grant funds awarded in one fiscal year to be used in the subsequent fiscal year. This will enable tribes to plan and operate their NEW programs in a sound and prudent fiscal manner.

On

Regarding the Implementation of Welfare Revisions In Indian Country

April 14, 1999

My name is Steve Ginnis, President of Tanana Chiefs Conference, Inc., a regional Native non-profit corporation comprised of 37 Interior Alaska Native tribes. I wish to thank Chairman Campbell, Vice-Chairman Inouye and the members of the Committee for holding this oversight hearing on welfare reform in Indian Country.

TCC's ASAP Program - Overview & Accomplishments

Tanana Chiefs Conference, Inc. (TCC) currently operates the Athabascan Self-Sufficiency Assistance Partnership (ASAP), which is the largest tribally administered TANF program in the nation from the perspective of funding, clients served, participating tribes and area served. There are currently 19 Tribal Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) programs serving 62 tribes nationally. TCC's ASAP program serves thirty-seven (37) or 60% of all nationally participating tribes. The service area covers an area of 235,000 square miles (a service area slightly smaller than the State of Texas). The program includes 45 separate communities, including Fairbanks, Alaska's second largest city. The ASAP program has a current caseload of 502 tribal families, with approximately 50% of the caseload living in Fairbanks. The remaining 50% are dispersed throughout the region in small isolated tribal communities, the majority of which are not accessible by road. We have a central staff of five full-time employees centered in Fairbanks, and have developed partnerships with our member tribes to base 38 half-time Tribal Workforce Development Specialists (TWDS) in our participating tribal communities. As part of our collaborative partnership design, three full-time State employees are out-stationed in the TCC central office to coordinate Medicaid and Food Stamp benefits for ASAP clients. The tribal ASAP workers are linked to, and work closely with TCC's comprehensive service system, which includes TCC and tribally operated health and social services programs, offering a wide array of family support services, and welfare-to-work, job placement, education and vocational assistance services. In the truest sense of the word, TCC's ASAP program, linked as it is with the full array of TCC services, provides a culturally appropriate, community based, comprehensive one-stop services to the TANF families throughout our vast region.

TCC began operation of ASAP in October 1998 under a transition plan developed with the existing Alaska State Alaska Temporary Assistance Program, the State TANF. In January, TCC assumed sole operation of the program. Prior to tribal assumption of this program, the State TANF program had:

- zero percent (0%) overall participation rate in approved work activities for the TCC village based TANF recipients;
- No employment/education placement program workers in rural tribal communities; and
- Few Native program workers.

The Athabascan people, especially our elders, strongly believe that the traditional welfare system, which operated in our region since Statehood, had eroded the traditional Athabascan work ethic, disrupted family cohesion, and undermined community values and efforts to combat substance abuse and other social ills that have been introduced into our communities in recent years. In a series of regional and tribal meetings, our tribal leaders developed a Welfare Reform program and designed a TANF program that was markedly different than that operated by the State. The tribally developed plan differed from the State plan by providing for:

- 5% reduction in benefit payment levels, to further encourage recipients to move from welfare to work;
- one-stop service centers every tribal community in the region, interfacing TANF, General Assistance, employment, welfare-to-work and education programs;
- mandated alcohol and substance abuse screening, and participation in evaluation and treatment;
- encouraged counseling for domestic violence victims, and mandated counseling for perpetrators;
- incentives for parents to participate in parent-teacher conferences;
- mandated health screening for recipients and their children;
- stronger sanctions for non-compliance with program mandates;
- maintenance of benefits and mandated work requirements during summer periods for two parent families; and
- child caretaker rules reflecting tribal customs, tribal law and recognizing extended family practice.

Unfortunately, we were not able to implement all the reforms called for by our villages because of restrictions associated with the State match needed to operate the program, which we hope to address through State legislation. We also experienced problems that need to be addressed by federal legislation. Despite these significant barriers, TCC's tribally administered ASAP program has been able to demonstrate accomplishments never before experienced under the State's TANF program. Within the first six months of operation of ASAP, we have experienced:

- 95% overall participation rate in approved work activities for all Tribal TANF clients;
- 18% permanent placement in paid employment for total tribal TANF caseload;
- 100% Native hire for all 44 staff positions, including recruitment and hire of former TANF recipients;
- Successful transition of 430 cases from State to tribal management in a 2 ½ month period;
- Creation of rural one-stop service centers in 37 remote rural tribal communities; and
- Establishment of shared case files and data systems with State operated Medicaid and Food Stamp programs.

TCC anticipates continued future success of its welfare reform efforts. However, statutory amendments and supportive regulatory guidance at both state and federal level are critically needed if we are to experience continued development and long-range program success.

I. AMENDMENTS ARE NEEDED TO ADDESSS CHILD SUPPORT ISSUES IN THE CONTEXT OF TRIBAL TANF'S

The current most pressing issue for the TCC TANF program relates to the coordination with child support enforcement efforts. TANF benefits are generally linked to child support collection efforts under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act. See 42 U.S.C. § 651 et seq. Title IV-A requires clients of state TANF programs to assign child support to the State as a condition for receiving TANF benefits. 42 U.S.C. § 608. Although, the statute does not specifically impose a similar requirement on Tribal TANF clients, ACF has determined that tribes can impose such a requirement. In Alaska, special rules apply (see below) which require "comparability" between tribal and state TANF's. See 42 U.S.C. § 612(i)(1). After extended negotiation on the matter, Alaskan tribal organizations and the State agreed that tribal TANF's must also require assignments from tribal TANF clients to the tribal organization as a condition of comparability. The Secretary has adopted such a requirement for Tribal TANF's under the legislation's comparability requirements. As a result, TCC is required to obtain client assignments for the benefit of TCC in our plan.

The federal government provides states funding under Title IV-D, including incentive payments to make collections of such assignments that benefit the States. Additionally, the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows tribes, for the first time, to also operate Title IV-D programs. See 42 U.S.C. § 655(f). However, the Office of Child Support Enforcement has not made funds generally available to tribes to operate such programs. As a result, in Alaska, TCC cannot operate a Title IV-D program, and is dependent upon the State Title IV-D program.[1] Oddly enough, under current law, there is no requirement for a Title IV-D agency to make collections for tribal TANF's. More importantly, current OCSE directives interpret Sec. 458 of Title 42, Title IV-D, to mean that State collections for tribal TANF cases are treated as non-TANF collections for the purposes of computing incentive payments to the State Title IV-D agency. The result is that there is a substantial financial disincentive for State Title IV-D agencies to collect assignments to tribal TANF's.

Additionally, OCSE policy directives raise substantial problems with the distribution of such collections if a State elects to act upon the tribal assignments. In particular, OCSE interprets Title IV-D, 42 U.S.C. § 457, to provide that collections made under assignments from tribal TANF recipients are to be treated as collections on behalf of families formerly receiving state assistance or families that never received state assistance. The result is that States making such collections under assignments to tribes must distribute such collections for current support to the families, rather than the tribes. In turn, the tribes must reduce the families TANF benefits to adjust for the paid child support. The result is a circle of payments, which simply increase state and tribal bureaucracy and add confusion to the system.

TCC has a different legal interpretation of the law respecting distributions. Specifically, Secs. 454(33) and 457 of Title 42 would seem to require if the State and the tribes have entered into agreement on such distributions, those agreement s should control such distributions. The Act is silent with regard to what is to be done in the absence of such an agreement.

1) 42 U.S.C. § 457 (Title IV-D) Should Be Amended To Clarify Distribution Rules For Collections Under Assignments From Current And Former Tribal TANF Recipients.

Congress should enact clarifying amendments respecting the distribution of collections under assignments from current and former tribal TANF recipients. Specifically, if a State or Tribal Title IV-D agency makes such collections, and a tribal-state agreement is in place to govern the distribution, the agreement should be followed. Where no agreement is in place, the distributions should be made to the tribal TANF.

[1] Of course, there is a continuing controversy in Alaska respecting the extent of Indian country in the State. Although the recent decision of the US Supreme Court in Alaska v Native Village of Venetie, 118 S.Ct. 948, 953n. 2 (1998) confirmed that Native allotments and other lands in Alaska constitute Indian country, there is continuing conflict between the State and tribes respecting the authority of tribal and state courts over tribal communities. This issue is, at present, theoretical in the Title IV-D context.

There are substantial reasons for this approach. Any tribal-state agreement respecting the distribution of child support collections would, most likely, be negotiated in connection with tribal-state discussions on state match. For example, Alaska provides a match to federal funding to the tribal TANF. It is logical that the State would receive a ratio of such distributions in proportion to its state match. On the other hand, six tribal TANF's operate without any state match, and TCC seriously considered the option when State match from Alaska seemed unlikely. In such cases, revenue from such collections might be very critical in making up the shortfall occasioned by state match. Finally, this provision may provide some states an incentive to provide state match, where they might not otherwise do so, if they understand that they may recover a portion of the match through such distributions of assigned child support collections. We would urge the committee to advance this amendment. (See below at page 12.)

2) 42 U.S.C. § 458 (Title IV-D) Should Be Amended To Treat Collections Under Tribal TANF Assignments As TANF Collections For The Purposes Of Computing Incentive Payments To Title IV-D Agencies.

Congress should amend Sec. 458 of Title 42 to treat collections under tribal TANF assignments as TANF collections for the purposes of computing incentive payments to state and tribal Title IV-D agencies. This policy would extend to Indian country the long-standing national policy to provide Title IV-D agencies incentives to make collections under child support assignments from welfare recipients. It would also foster more productive tribal-state relations in the area of child support, which has been an area of long-standing controversy. Such a proposal would provide Title IV-D agencies an incentive to make collections on behalf of the tribal TANF's which does not now exist.

II. CONGRESS SHOULD REPEAL THE ALASKA ONLY PROVISIONS OF PRWORA.

There are two sections of PRWORA which treat Alaska Native tribes differently than the tribes in the other States. First, Sec. 419(4)(B) provides a special definition of Indian tribe for Alaska to include only the 12 regional non-profit corporations, including Tanana Chiefs Conference, Inc. See 42 U.S.C. § 619(4)(B). Second, Sec. 412(h) requires that tribal TANF programs in Alaska shall be "comparable" to the state operated TANF program. See 42 U.S.C. § 612(i). Neither provision has proven needed, and unduly restricts design of tribal programming.

1) Designation of Regional Non-Profit Corporations As Tribes

The definition in Sec. 419(4)(B) of PRWORA, 42 U.S.C. § 619(4)(B), was originally premised upon the view that tribes in Alaska were smaller than lower '48 tribes and would require large centrally operated tribal TANF's to be efficient. This policy is premised upon mistakes of fact. Moreover, experience now tells us that the assumptions respecting efficiency were not correct.

Alaskan tribes are not necessarily smaller than tribes in the Lower '48, and the experience of the Lower '48 tribes clearly demonstrates that small tribes can successfully operate TANF programs, either directly or in consortium with other tribes. For example, three of the current tribal TANF's have less than 25 cases. Particularly in California and in other states as well, many of the tribes are roughly the same size or smaller than the average Alaska Native tribes. In this case, tribes voluntarily banded together to form a consortium for operation of a single TANF. Clearly, small tribes have the capacity to assess the relative economy-of-scale of their programs and form service systems that meet their needs in a responsible manner. Indeed, TCC is such a tribal organization, which was voluntarily formed by its member tribes, and operates the majority of its programs under "voluntary" delegations of authority from its member tribes. Both the experiences in California and in Alaska demonstrate that many Alaskan tribes are of comparable size to Lower '48 tribes operating TANF. Moreover, tribes in all states have demonstrated that they can responsibly exercise their prerogatives to cooperate with other tribes without federal mandates from a distant Washington DC forcing cooperative action.

Moreover, there are serious problems that can develop from forced inter-tribal consortiums. Different regions have different needs and organize service delivery systems differently. For example, the backbone of the TCC ASAP plan is tribal operation of the local one-stop offices. TCC could not have accomplished its successes if the tribes did not assume major responsibilities in the operation of the program. In essence, TCC's plan works with the tribes to place local services in the village, where it is needed. Thus, regardless of the law, cooperation of local tribal councils is the only mechanism available to inject services at the local level. The federal mandate for regional programming cannot countermand this practical imperative.

The provision removes from consideration options respecting the use of other regional and sub-regional consortium or tribal vehicles where appropriate. TCC is one of the few regional non-profits to have a single regional '638 contractor for health and BIA programs. The majority of Alaskan regions have two regional non-profits: one operating BIA and related programs and the second operating IHS health programs. Most regions have separate housing authorities, and in the past most regions have operated the former CETA program as a separate consortium. Moreover, even in the TCC region, many tribes contract for direct operation of such programs outside of TCC. There are pros and cons to each alternative, and the better choice is often dependent upon geographic, demographic and financial reasons.

For example, a single regional entity may have lower administrative costs than its member tribes. However, this is not always the case. As this committee is aware, State and non-BIA/non-IHS agencies are reluctant to pay contract support costs mandated by law for '638 contractors. Indeed, current proposed ACF regulations propose administrative cost limits below some regional '638 contractor rates in Alaska. On the other hand, a large portion of TANF costs should be administered under "pass-through" indirect rates, which may be unnecessarily high for some '638 regional contractors. Indeed, some village-based tribes in Alaska have lower "pass through" indirect rates than their regional non-profit counterparts. In some regions, it may make more sense to have the regional health corporation operate the TANF rather than the non-profit named in the Act, because the non-profit does not contract on behalf of the tribe, while the health corporation does. Finally, some Alaskan regions are fairly small, and may wish to form trans-regional consortia. On the other hand, some villages in Alaska have larger caseloads than some of the smaller regions. From a financial and administrative standpoint, arbitrarily forced TANF consortia in Alaska are not necessarily the best alternative available in every case.

A good case in point is my village of Fort Yukon. Fort Yukon is a mature '638 compactor operating several BIA programs on its own. The TANF caseload in Fort Yukon is larger than some lower '48 tribes currently operating TANF programs, and is larger than some regions in Alaska, if they were to operate the program. Fort Yukon administers its own BIA general assistance program. There is no reason why the tribe could not administer its own TANF program. To some degree, having Fort Yukon operate its own TANF might actually benefit the overall TCC TANF program, because it would allow TCC to focus its efforts on smaller villages, and Fort Yukon could provide greater focus on the Fort Yukon caseload. This option is not available under the current law, and it is simply unwise to unnecessarily restrict programming options, which maybe more beneficial.

2) Comparability Requirement.

On the second point, Section 412(h) of PRWORA requires "comparability" between Alaskan tribal TANF's and the State TANF. See 42 U.S.C. § 612(i). The problem with this concept is that the current State TANF system has been a failure in rural Alaska. There are substantial differences between TCC's and the State's TANF program. The State's policy has been to simply make cash payments to our people and offer them little or no services to transition them from welfare to work. Indeed, the State TANF plan focuses efforts in urban Alaska, and proposes no meaningful reforms for rural Alaska. The State TANF plan assumed that it could meet federal standards for work participation if efforts were focused primarily on the larger urban centers. Penalties which the State will incur this year for not meeting the federal work participation requirements reflects an inability to tailor TANF programming to Alaska's tribal communities, whose dynamics require flexibility in the use of TANF funding. It is illogical to assume that successful tribal TANF should be measured for comparability against failed state programs.

The original idea behind the 'comparability' provision was that the State did not want to see Native clients paid at one rate, and non-Native clients paid at another. Simply providing equal cash payments is not a measure of a program's ability to promote meaningful welfare reform. Tribes believe that if their members are to receive services of the same quality of those offered to other citizens of the State, they must have the ability to allocate available funds to provide expanded welfare to work transition services, instead of mere equal cash benefits. The comparability requirement limits tribes' ability to tailor services to client needs, and we urge the Congress to repeal this requirement.

III. GENERAL COMMENTS.

1) Need To Increase Federal Funding For The Division of Tribal Services Technical Assistance Efforts To Expand Tribal TANF's

There are only 19 tribal TANF's covering 62 tribes in the nation. It is premature to characterize the overall success of tribally operated TANF's nationally. However, TCC has clearly demonstrated that tribal TANF's can improve service delivery to tribal communities and begin to reverse the historical destructive effects of welfare in Native communities. But tribal operation of these programs is the exception, rather than the norm in Indian country.

Many tribes are cautious about embracing tribal operation of TANF, and this is a wise course of action. The program is difficult to operate. However, we believe that the lack of support in ACF for the tribal programs is a major impediment to tribes assuming greater control over welfare programs in tribal communities. The Tribal Services

Division's technical assistance efforts at ACF have been excellent, but are very limited. As a result, Indian Country has severely criticized the ACF for the lack of tribal consultation, the lack of technical assistance in program development, and the lack of support for tribal program operations. ACF has estimated that the total value of technical assistance to tribes nationally on TANF is slightly more than a million dollars. We believe that the lack of funding of training and technical assistance for tribes is a major impediment to tribal assumption of TANF programs.

2) Need To Maintain Incentives For States To Provide Match Funding.

A second major impediment to tribal assumption of TANF programs is the lack of State match. Early draft versions of PRWORA included a straight set-aside for Tribal programs amounting to between 1 ½ to 3 percent of federal TANF appropriations. Congress rejected those proposals in favor of the current law, which provided tribes the federal share of expenditures for the benefit of Indians in their service areas in 1994.

For many states, such as Alaska, where federal funds amount to only 50% of total program costs, the result was to require states to provide match to federal funds, unless the tribes could commit tribal funds to make up the difference. States have been slow to enact legislation where needed, or otherwise provide the needed match. The critical nature of this issue is demonstrated by the fact that 1/3 of the tribal TANF's in the nation operate with no state assistance.[2] Of the four pending plans, two of which are in Alaska, State match issues must be resolved before the plans can proceed forward.

The current law provides several incentives to encourage States to provide the match, including credit for state match to a State's required maintenance of effort, tribal flexibility in determining service population, and the State option to disregard/include tribal TANF numbers in achieving TANF targets. We support continuance of these incentives to the States.

3) Support Parity Between State and Tribes On Incentives, Loans and Bonuses.

The current law excludes tribes from federal support available to States in a grossly unfair manner. Tribes are subject to many of the same penalties to which States are subject, but they are not eligible for incentives, loans and bonuses provided to States. These programs in the current law are intended to help states who experience short term problems, and reward States which succeed in addressing the issues Congress sought to address in welfare reform. The law's message is clear to tribes: the Federal government will not help if you experience problems, and will not reward tribes if they succeed.

We believe that tribal exclusion from these elements of welfare reform was inadvertent; a product of Congressional attention to the enormous task of overhauling the welfare system. However, the Act is now three years old and the continuing lack of parity between states and tribes on these issues can no longer be explained by inadvertence. We would urge this Committee to advance amendments that would make tribes eligible for the incentives, loans and bonuses available to the States.

4) Support For NCAI Recommendations.

TCC has had an opportunity to review and participate in the development of the NCAI recommendations to this committee. We direct the Committee's attention to those recommendations and express our support for the positions set out in that testimony. In particular, we wish to highlight NCAI's proposal to allow carry-over of TANF funding, and reauthorization of the Tribal Welfare-to-Work program. Carry over of funding is more consistent with the underlying philosophy of welfare reforms, which was to block-grant federal payments and end the AFDC entitlements. These funds are now capped and sound management must anticipate years where demand for assistance will fluctuate and the possibility of disasters. Prudent fiscal management would require that program savings in relatively good economic periods be carried forward to address future poor economic conditions. Moreover, continuation of tribal welfare-to-work programs merely reflects the well-known economic conditions on Indian reservations, and the greater barriers to employment in tribal communities.

5) Need For Economic Development In Tribal Communities.

The reality is that true welfare reform requires economic development. The national economy is currently in the longest period of growth since World War II. But every Indian community does not participate in this expanding national economy. In Alaska, the decline in the price of oil has resulted in oil field work force layoffs. Many of those laid off are Natives who only recently entered those jobs. Moreover, we are expecting major reductions in State spending in rural Alaska due to a decline in State oil revenues, which will soon result in loss of work opportunity for our people. As has so often noted, Indian people are the "miner canaries" of the general society – the first to suffer economic downturns and the last to reap the benefit of economic good times. TCC's TANF demonstrates that Indian society prefers work to welfare. It is our culture. In order to put this cultural mandate into practice, we need jobs in Indian country. We would urge the Committee to consider pending legislation targeting economic development in tribal communities in this context.

Thank-you for your consideration of these comments.

Amendments Proposed by Tanana Chiefs Conference, Inc.

Amendment # 1
Child Support Collections Distribution

Section 457(a)(4) [42 U.S.C.A. 657(a)(4)] is repealed and reenacted to read:

Introduction

Chairman Campbell, and distinguished members of the Committee, I am pleased to address the Committee about child support and enforcement services for the children most in need, American Indian children.

My testimony is drawn from my experience as a facilitator for the development of tribal child support programs and from my 19 years experience as a tribal judge familiar with the need for tribal child support services.

Needs of American Indian Children

This Nation's American Indian children have the greatest need for child support services. Census statistics on poverty and families nationwide show:

- 34.2% of American Indian children are under 18 compared to 25.6% of the total population;
- 27.2% of American Indian families live in poverty compared to 10% of the total population;
- 45.6% of American Indian families have only a female parent and 15.5% have only a male parent in the home compared to 18.8% and 4.0%, respectively in the total population; and
- The average family income for an American Indian household is $21,619 compared to $35,225 for the total population.

Labor force statistics for American Indians on reservations, from the Department of Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) show that in 1995:

- 35% of the total labor force was employed; and
- only 29% of those employed between the ages of 16 and 64 earned $9,048 or more.

These statistics show you that on reservation children are in great need of assistance through the development of tribal child support services.

Tribes are the units of government most in touch with their children's needs and the most motivated to meet those needs, including that of financial well being. Tribes have authority to act where the state either cannot or will not cooperate with tribal governments to collect child support for tribal children. Tribes have the knowledge to provide for that support in a cultural and practical way based on their specific and unique community norms.

Tribes only lack the funding and technical assistance to meet our children's child support needs. States have had funding for about 25 years to start up and maintain comprehensive programs but often lack understanding of jurisdictional limits over tribal members and land.

PRWORA and other legislation address this need by mandating full faith and credit for child support orders, authorizing the direct funding for tribal child support programs, and securing a voice for tribes in the implementation of such legislation.

A Brief Legislative History

First, Congress recognized American Indian children should have the same right to support as non-native children and that tribes have jurisdiction over many support matters when it mandated full faith and credit for orders across jurisdictional boundaries for states and tribes in the "Full Faith and Credit for Child Support Orders Act" passed in 1994 (28 USC 1738B).

Second, Congress intended to advance and fund tribal child support offices in the 1996 Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act (PRWORA), Public Law 104-193, commonly called welfare reform legislation. Until PRWORA, Congress had not furnished a mechanism for providing services when cases came within a tribe's jurisdiction. However, this legislation and its amendments authorized the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make direct payments to an Indian tribe or tribal organization that has the capacity to operate a program and required the Secretary to promulgate regulations establishing requirements for grant eligibility.

One other Congressional requirement deals with your consideration of Health and Human Services' Office of Child Support Enforcement (OCSE) actions on tribal child support enforcement programs, the "Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995," Public Law 104-4. Under this law, federal agencies must develop a process for tribal government input when developing regulations and must prepare for and consider the impact to tribes before adopting regulations.

In PRWORA, Congress has already provided the necessary statutory authority for direct funding of child support enforcement services through tribes.

Current Administrative Policies

Executive Order 13084, dated May 14, 1998, affirms long standing federal law principles and policies about tribes' inherent sovereign powers over Indians and Indian Country. Its purpose is:

> "to establish regular and meaningful consultation and collaboration with Indian tribal governments in the development of regulatory practices on Federal matters that significantly or uniquely affect their communities; to reduce the imposition of unfunded mandates upon Indian tribal governments; and to streamline the application process for and increase the availability of waivers to Indian tribal governments."

Consistent with both Congress' mandates and this Order, the Secretary has issued a Departmental Policy requiring consultation with tribal governments prior to taking actions that affect them.

The Commissioner of OCSE has made statements inconsistent with this policy and taken inconsistent actions as described below.

Administrative Actions of OCSE

Initially, after the enactment of PRWORA over 2 ½ years ago, OCSE established the national Office of Native American Programs (ONAP). ONAP was intended to provide policy direction, information and technical assistance to tribes implementing child support enforcement programs based on input from tribes.

ONAP held a series of tribal consultations in 1998 despite a lack of administrative support from OCSE. At the consultations, it gathered information about the real world needs existing in tribal communities and identifying what federal responses to those needs would make a difference in the success of tribal child support programs.

However, during and after those consultations, several concerns arose:

- States were provided with information about requirements that would be imposed on tribal programs in a detailed transmittal dated July 28, 1998 prior to the completion of the consultations and containing information that was not consistent with either PRWORA or the information being given to tribes;

- "Action Transmittals," informational publications by OCSE to states, were published which lacked a basic grasp of the jurisdiction of tribes in child support matters. For example, the only jurisdictional issue recognized by one publication was when a noncustodial parent resides on a reservation. It failed to recognize that tribal jurisdiction will be concurrent with states and perhaps exclusive of states, when the child or the custodial parent is a member residing on the reservation needing assistance with establishing and enforcing an existing child support order;

- Contracts with persons and organizations familiar with tribal child support issues were eliminated because of internal policies, not a lack of dollars within OCSE. The drafting of regulations shifted to in house employees with little or no experience with tribal governments;

- Lucille Dawson, the Native American hired for ONAP resigned because she lacked support from OCSE and, according to Ms. Dawson, because she experienced blatant discrimination. Since her retirement/resignation, no one in OCSE has adequate experience working with tribes or in Indian Country;

- According to Ms. Dawson, the original January 1997 $7 million budget for ONAP and tribal services was cut to $1 million, then services were reduced through consultant contracts to $500,000, then the contract was reduced to $300,000 and limited to doing a report on two tribal grantees who shared total direct funding of a mere $100,000; and

- The Commissioner of OCSE, David Gray Ross, recently informed state child support program directors, in a conference call on February 16, 1999, that Indians are not a priority in his office, echoing his earlier statement to tribal judges on Monday, June 8, 1998 that Indians are not a priority for funding and development of tribal programs.

Chairman Campbell and Committee members, please understand the OCSE has more money now to aid local child support programs than ever before. In the 1970's under earlier welfare programs, state programs received full funding to purchase equipment, hire and train staff and to do this work. This same opportunity should be given to tribes.

These concerns have been echoed by national Native American organizations such as the National Congress of American Indians (NCAI) and the National American Indian Court Judges Association (NAICJA) who passed resolutions requesting the Secretary take quick action to resolve these serious issues.

States share these concerns with tribes. In January 1999, the National Council of State Child Support Enforcement Administrators passed a resolution urging OCSE to report on the progress of the regulations, finalize draft regulations as a top priority and move forward to direct funding of tribes as quickly as possible. In March 1999, the State of Montana's Child Support Enforcement Division also inquired of OCSE about the delay of direct funding to tribal programs and the lack of progress in drafting regulations.

What Needs to be Done

Our children experience the greatest financial need in the United States. On an issue that is a major policy development under PROWRA, OCSE has said that Indians are not a priority and failed to follow its mandate. This is unacceptable.

Please do whatever you can to ensure three things happen:

1. Reinstate the financial commitment to provide adequate start-up funding for tribal child support enforcement programs and ongoing training and technical assistance comparable to that for state programs.

2. Revitalize the Office of Native American Programs by elevating it to the same level of authority as a regional office within OCSE, with a Director position for tribes within that office (even Guam has a Director position).

3. Creating regulations governing direct funding for tribes must be treated as development of major policy by OCSE. This must be done by persons having knowledge about tribal needs and should not be delayed for another 2 ½ years.

No group of children in the United States need child support enforcement services more than American Indian children. Congress has done its job by passing laws like PRWORA and should not be misled that those laws are being implemented by OCSE. I urge this Committee to insist that funding for and development of tribal child support programs be a top priority for the Office of Child Support Enforcement, within the Administration for Children and Families, Department of Health & Human Services.

Re: Written Testimony, Welfare Reform in Indian Country

Dear Senator Nighthorse Campbell,

We concur with the Tribal leaders testimony at the Welfare Reform in Indian Country hearing held on April 14,1999. In addition we would like to suggest the following recommendations.

Problem:

One of the major barriers of providing any service to Indian Country is the lack of transportation. Rural public transportation is sporadic and in most areas non-existence. Tribal members must complete one application Tribal TANF cash assistance, travel to the local county welfare office to complete a similar application for Food Stamps and Medi-cal.

State agencies are responsible for conducting the Medi-Cal, Federal Food Stamps program and the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP) eligibility on Indian reservations. Historically, Indian people are underrepresented in all three programs.

One of the goals of the Southern California Tribal Chairman's Association Tribal TANF program is to become more accessible to the community, by providing a one stop application for all welfare related services.

Recommendation:

Amend the Indian Health Care Improvement Act to include the following language.

"Indian Tribes that administer a Tribal TANF program are authorized to determine eligibility for the Medi-Cal, Federal Food Stamp and Children's Health Insurance Programs".

Problem:

While many Indian Tribes have the capacity to administer a Tribal TANF program, few funding sources are available for the following supportive services: substance abuse, mental health, child care, transportation, economic development, education, housing, job development, facilities teen pregnancy prevention and other services.

The attached Tribal TANF Wheel shows the preliminary relationship between the Tribe and Federal Agencies in relation to welfare services. For example:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Criminal information necessary to determine drug history or fleeing felon, investigation of fraud, domestic violence, Tribal Courts

DEPARTMENT OF TREASURY

Internal Revenue Services to intercept tax return of non-custodial parent for Tribal TANF program

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

W2W Access transportation funds

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Economic Development and Telecommunication Distance learning

. MENT OF HOUSING & URBAN DEVELOPMENT

.:nterprise/Empowerment Zones, Hub zones, homelessness funds, economic development, youth development, substance abuse

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES

Substance abuse, mental health, child welfare, domestic violence, job opportunities for low income, economic development, family planning, Medicaid, immunizations, Head Start, disabilities, child support, child care, teen pregnancy prevention, etc.

Tribes must compete with professional proposal writers and in some cases are not eligible to apply.

Recommendation:

Instruct Federal Agencies to provide direct funding to Tribes in a block grant type of funding method through Cooperative Agreements, MOU's or the Standard Form Interagency Transfer Agreement.

Indian and Native American Employment and Training Coalition

Statement of the Indian & Native American Employment & Training Coalition prepared for the hearing on welfare reform conducted by the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate April 14, 1999

The Indian and Native American Employment and Training Coalition urges the Committee, its Members and the Congress to:

1. Reauthorize the tribal component of the Welfare-to-Work program, increasing the level of funding for tribes to at least $30 million per year and enabling tribes to serve all Indian TANF recipients in their service areas.

2. Consider the increased demands for service on all tribal programs, especially employment programs, in setting FY 2000 appropriations levels for those programs.

3. Support an targeted economic development program to create at least 40,000 jobs for welfare recipients in Indian Country.

The passage of welfare reform legislation in 1996 posed a major challenge for Indian tribes and poor American Indian and Alaska Native families. The law ordered needy families to get a job in communities where there are no jobs. It assumed the availability of employment and social services in remote, rural communities where such services don't exist. And it set time limits on public assistance in places where poverty has been endemic for generations.

Despite these staggering challenges, tribes have responded. Tribal employment programs have worked to make the impossible happen. The record of those tribes where employment and related services are integrated under Public Law 102-477 has been particularly impressive.

A number of 477 tribes have taken on their own TANF programs. Of the 19 tribes or tribal organizations with approved TANF plans, 4 are 477 tribes: the

Information Office: 1000 Wisconsin Avenue, Northwest, Washington, DC. 20007 (202) 342-0594 FAX: (202) 342-1132

Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe, the Osage Tribe, the Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians and the Port Gamble S'Klallam Tribe.

The ability to focus all available employment-related programs on moving tribal families toward self-sufficiency is arguably the most important tool a tribe has in running a successful TANF program. The testimony presented to the Committee by the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe attests to this.

Running a tribal TANF program is not currently a viable option for most tribes, for many reasons. The 477 tribes that are not in TANF have frequently been leaders in meeting the challenges of welfare reform in other ways.

The tribes in North Dakota, two of whom are in 477, developed one of the first agreements in the country on coordination of tribal employment services with the state TANF agency. In Alaska, where eleven tribes or tribal organizations participate in 477, most contract with the state welfare agency to provide work services to Alaska Native families on TANF.

Although there are many lessons to be drawn from the varied tribal experiences with welfare reform, one stands out. Federal resources are crucial. The Coalition's three recommendations speak to this point.

The tribal component of the Welfare-to-Work program is the only new resource that Congress has made available to help tribes deal with the employment challenges in welfare reform. This program expires at the end of this Fiscal Year. The program must be reauthorized.

Under current law, tribes participating in TANF and the Native Employment Works (NEW) program, along with other tribes that provide substantial services to welfare recipients, receive $15 million per year of Welfare-to-Work (WtW) money. That amount should be increased to $30 million. Further, this financial assistance should be available whether or not Congress renews the program for the states.

Current law severely restricts what tribes can do with their WtW money. The bulk of the funds must be spent on welfare recipients with certain characteristics. Although the targeting provisions are laudable in principle, they don't work well in small, tribal communities.

In such communities it is not operationally feasible to say to one welfare family, we'll help you, and to deny assistance to an equally poor family down the road.

Tribal services are the only services that reach such communities. They must be able to help all welfare recipients.

Several states, including ones like South Dakota and Idaho, have turned down their Welfare-to-Work money. This has the effect of denying additional services to tribal families who constitute a significant portion of the state's public assistance caseload. Tribes should be able to receive money, provided by formula for tribal families, that the states don't want.

The Coalition's second recommendation deals with FY 2000 appropriations for related programs, like the Indian program under the Workforce Investment Act (WIA). In 2000, the Indian WIA program will replace the current Indian JTPA (Job Training Partnership Act) program.

While the need to help move welfare families into the workforce has increased, Indian job training funding has not. Indian JTPA funds have remained stagnant despite the substantially increased demand on tribal employment services.

The Administration's budget request for FY 2000 violates the minimum funding provision for Indian WIA programs in the law. The funding request is for $53.8 million. The law reserves not less than $55 million for Indian WIA programs.

In adopting a FY 2000 appropriations measure for the Departments of Labor, HHS and Education, the Congress should provide at least $55 million, the minimum funding level set for Indian WIA programs in the law. A funding level of $65 million would barely restore the program to its size 5 years ago, before welfare reform escalated the need for these services.

Data assembled by HHS and DOL when the Welfare-to-Work program started indicated that there were 40,000 adult Indian people on AFDC/TANF in reservation areas and Alaska Native communities. Welfare reform expects each one to become permanently employed. At the same time, welfare reform provided no resources to create new jobs for those on public assistance.

If welfare reform is to mean hope instead of tragedy in Indian Country, the Congress must provide resources for a targeted job creation program that will reach all Indian welfare families.

Honorable Ben Nighthorse Campbell, Chairman
Senate Committee on Indian Affairs
Washington D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Campbell:

On Wednesday, April 14, 1999 the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs held an oversight hearing on the impacts on tribal communities of the implementation of the Personal Responsibilities and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996. Although the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes (CSKT) were not able to attend the hearing, we hereby provide the following written comments and request they become a part of the official hearing record.

CSKT began operation of a Tribal Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) plan at the beginning of 1999 after negotiations with the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS), in which we were subjected to a paternalistic approach dating back to an era prior to Self-Determination period implemented in 1975. The Division of Tribal Programs within DHHS refused to acknowledge the opportunities authorized for tribes in the P.L.104-193. As a result, they refused to negotiate with CSKT in areas clearly permitted for in the law. CSKT requests Congress take the following action:

1. Mandate DHHS to delay promulgation of the proposed regulations for Tribal TANF programs until meaningful discussions and consultation with the tribes have occurred. The proposed regulations published in the Federal Register far exceed the restrictions placed on the states and fail to acknowledge the provisions provided tribes in the authorizing legislation. The rules should reflect a set of rules achieved on a government-to-government basis.

2. Mandate DHHS fulfill the congressional direction provided in Section 412, DIRECT FUNDING AND ADMINISTRATION BY INDIAN TRIBES (c) Minimum Work Requirements and Time Limits. The Secretary, with the participation of Indian tribes, shall establish for each Indian tribe receiving a grant under this section minimum work participation requirements, appropriate time limits for receipt of welfare-related services under the grant. DHHS has set a time limit for receipt of benefits, without consideration to tribal input. CSKT proposed an alternative time limit to the one determined by DHHS. The Department never seriously considered our proposal. When we attempted to appeal the decision, our requests were remanded by to the Division of Tribal Services that originally denied our proposals.

3. DHHS has determined that unlike states, that can retain access to funds from one fiscal year to the next, tribes must return any unused fiscal year funds to the Treasury. Tribes have been told that the only way to correct this discrepancy is for Congress to correct it through technical amendments. This correction is imperative to tribes as they must be permitted to build a reserve account of unused funds in order to prepare for unforeseen economic difficulties just as the states have been permitted to build prepare for.

4. Congress should authorize Tribes to share in any bonus funds available to states.

5. Congress should require DHHS to provide Tribes with funds, which would provide Tribes an opportunity to determine the accurate amount of funds the Tribe will need to operate a Tribal TANF program. CSKT and the State of Montana worked closely to determine an accurate funding amount. However, there was no mechanism to determine the number of cases the Tribes would receive of families who refused to participate in the state program or who had not received support services needed for employment while receiving the state benefits. The CSKT Tribal TANF program has received a number of these cases without adequate funding in the TANF program or the support programs that supplement it.

Your attention to welfare reform in Indian Country is greatly appreciated. We look forward to continuing to work with Congress as we create employment opportunities for all our people.

Sincerely,

CONFEDERATED SALISH AND KOOTENAI TRIBES

Michael T. Pablo, Chairman
Tribal Council

Question: On April 14, 1999, Assistant Secretary Kevin Gover of BIA testified at the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee hearing and urged the creation of an Alcohol and Drug Abuse Office in BIA, even though other agencies (DOJ, HUD, and HHS) already provide alcohol and substance abuse services. Would the Department support a measure to allow tribes to consolidate these programs into a single block grant, much the way they consolidate employment programs under P.L. 102-477?

Answer: The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) and the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) share a common and significant interest in the alcohol and substance abuse issues that affect American Indian and Alaska Native people and communities. The Indian Health Service (IHS), which is under HHS, has the responsibility for overseeing the Federal government's role in protecting the health of Native Americans. In that role, IHS oversees the alcohol and substance abuse program for American Indian and Alaska Native people and directs the professional staff that are working to address the clinical and treatment aspects of alcohol and substance abuse problems in Indian Country. The President's FY 2000 Budget includes a request of $400,000 to establish an Office of Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention in the BIA. Staff assigned to this office will provide on-site training and assist tribes in implementing plans to address widespread problems.

The Department is aware of the impacts that multiple grants from a variety of agencies have on a tribal organization. We are working to reduce or eliminate these negative impacts. An Executive branch working group also is exploring the option of a single grant application process for tribes to use in applying for grant funds from various agencies. The group's goal is to reduce the amount of paperwork experienced by the tribes as they apply for grants not currently awarded under the authority of P.L. 93-638, the Indian Self Determination Act. At the same time, the group hopes to broaden Indians' access to a wider range of Federal funding for chemical dependency prevention and treatment.

At this time, HHS has no current plans to pursue a single block grant approach. However, considering IHS role in overseeing the alcohol and substance abuse for American Indians and Alaskan Natives, we feel strongly that, no matter what steps are taken, IHS maintain its leading role in this area.
